Susan Maheras, owner of Clipper Travel on Country Way agreed. She warned that it was too early to gauge if the station would provide a boom to the area, and worries the town will realize its made a mistake after the station is built.

"I do not want to be one of those put out of business because of a mistake," Maheras said.

Kathy Donahue of Cushing Landing said that the station would have no positive effect on the area. "It's documented that a station doesn't bring commerce to an area," she said. "Kingston will attest to that." Donahue said that most people will get off the train and directly into their cars without spending time in the area. "This is strictly cars and trains," she said.

"I do not want to be one of those put out of business because of a mistake."

Wood Island Road Chick Gates said that the MBTA does not need stations in Cohasset, Greenbush and North Scituate. He also stressed a concern on the parking situation.

"The merchants that are there struggle for space as it is," he said.

Maheras said that even now, she often has to park on the street or a good distance from her store, and noted that she couldn't imagine how congested the area would become with a train station and parking lot in the village. Other residents commented that commuters parking in North Scituate will fill up not only the spots in the T parking lot, but in the business lots as well.

Planning Board member Jonathan Warner asked that the town possibly allot roughly 50 spaces to be used strictly by residents.

At Tuesday's selectman's meeting, Callahan thanked his counterparts in Scituate board for their vote and for their consideration about the impact elimination of the North Scituate station would have on Cohasset..

asm they're exuding is just beautiful for both."

He explained that every year the honor society comes up with a community service project. Last year, the group volunteered at Rosie's Place, a homeless shelter. To be admitted to the honor society, students must have at least a B+ average and are judged on character, service and leadership by a faculty council.

The honor society has about 55 members, so students will take turns working with the dozen or so senior citizens in the computer classes.

Casey, who says he's not a computer whiz, admits to being a little uneasy about providing lessons at first.

"I was a little worried, but this is really beginner stuff," he said.

Fellow honor society member Julia Lovallo said some of the seniors come with a list of things they want to learn.

"They're excited to learn the very simple things," she says.

And Robin Cunningham, honor society treasurer, said one student wrote everything down on a note card.

"I've never seen anyone so excited over every little thing," he said. Robin said many of the seniors are interested in checking out their stocks on line.

The honor society students have also helped the seniors set up their own free e-mail accounts.

Carol Barrett of the Council on Elder Affairs said the classes are a hit.

"The individual attention that's given to each senior so that they're really learning at the level they are is just wonderful," she says. "The seniors are very grateful to the students and they have been very gracious to us."

Stamp, who was reached by telephone at home just as she was trying to log onto the search engine Yahoo, has become a fan of the students and computers.

"What a lovely idea — these kids trying to teach old people how to use computers," she said. "They have such patience.

"It does take time."

Stamp said she purchased a 99-cent dictionary at the store that had a page in the back explaining computer terms.

"The kids were saying put your cursor here and I didn't know what a cursor meant," she said. "I'm going to photocopy the page for the others in the class."

Group seeks MBTA files

Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan has said Greenbush will be built under "design-build" plan which means, rather than taking out bonds to pay for the project, the MBTA will borrow the money from the contractor and pay it back over 20 years.)

Greenbush, which has been mired in controversy over environmental issues for more than a decade, is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project. The Middleboro and Plymouth lines resumed service in September 1997.

Also named in the lawsuit are the Executive Office of Transportation and Construction and the Massachusetts Highway Department.

AfTA hired Douglas Wilkins of the Cambridge law firm Anderson and Kreiger to make the records request.

Bewick said AfTA's ultimate goal is to get better transportation for the South Shore without "tremendous disruption to the communities."

He said the purpose of this particular lawsuit is not to stop Greenbush but to get the information that was requested.

Joe Pesaturo, MBTA spokesman, said the lawsuit took state officials by surprise.

"First of all we were shocked to receive notice of the lawsuit because we've been busy compiling the information requested," he said. "Also, it is our strong belief that this could have been resolved informally."

But the MBTA denied in writing there have been any documents produced about Greenbush since August 2000, Bewick said..

"Regrettably, the public agencies we are suing have stonewalled may of AfTA's requests for information," he said, adding that their motives in doing so "are a mystery." He said state agencies are required by law to produce documents within 10 days of requests and those named in the lawsuit have failed to comply.

Bewick said this is the first of several lawsuits AfTA will pursue relating to Greenbush. He declined to elaborate.

He said AfTA's motive with the public records lawsuit is to obtain full disclosure of information to allow full a and fair debate so better decisions are made with regard to transportation alternatives for the South Shore.

"AfTA's suit will force the state to reveal the truth so that the public can properly compare the proposed Greenbush project and alternatives," he said.

Pesaturo, the MBTA spokesman, said the Greenbush project will move forward despite the lawsuit.

"AfTA points to the fact that we live in a democratic society," he said. "But we're going to continue to work with citizens in the Greenbush corridor to make this project a reality."

Town to hold hearing on water rate settlement

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen will hold a hearing later this month to discuss a proposed settlement in its fight against the proposed water rate increase by Mass-American Water Company.

In November, the water company filed with the federal Department of Telecommunications and Energy for a 16 percent increase in its rates. The Mass-American Water Company provides water service for Hingham, Hull and North Cohasset.

But at a settlement conference late last month between the water company, DTE, and attorney's for the three towns, Mass-American proposed settling the dispute by reducing the increase to 10.5 percent.

Town Manager Mark Haddad told Selectmen Tuesday night that this was a "great deal for the town" and urged the board to accept the proposal.

The rate increase will affect approximately 500 customers in North Cohasset.

Haddad said if the dispute went to a hearing, the best the town could do was estimated between 12 and 14 percent.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Thomas Callahan initially supported authorizing the agreement that night, but Selectman Ronnie McMorris argued that the board should hold a hearing first, in case any affected residents objected.

"I think this board should get people's thoughts on it," she said.

Fellow selectman Michael Sullivan agreed, saying, "I'd hate to have a discussion on this after the issue has basically been resolved."

New board chairman Fred Koed sided with Sullivan and McMorris. "It is nice, especially sitting in these chairs [as the board of selectmen], to have public input," he said.

Despite Mass-American wanting to have the deal signed by May 1, the board scheduled the hearing for its April 24 meeting. Hingham and Hull are expected to have made a decision by then.

The rate increase will affect approximately 500 customers in North Cohasset, already home to some of the highest water rates in the country. In 1996 after Mass-American built a new $40 million treatment plant, water bills jumped up to an average of $639 a year.

Mass-American said the new rate increase is needed because of an increase in capital improvements and depreciation costs to the system, and new rate changes rewarding water conservation.

Water main flushing to begin April 16

Starting Monday, April 16, the Water Department will begin flushing of all water mains throughout Cohasset.

"This flushing program, while it may cause some short-term discoloration of water, will improve water quality, taste and odor, for all of our customers," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "The flushing should take only 2-3 weeks to complete," he said.

In the week starting April 16, the following areas will be flushed in this approximate order: (1) Pond Street, (2) Clay Spring Road, Old Pasture Rd, Reservoir Road area; (3) Hill Street area, Norfolk Road, Bancroft Road, (4) Sohier Street, Fairoaks Lane, King St. (Pond St – Sohier), Ripley Road, Pleasant Street, (5) Route 3A, King St. – Scituate, Brewster Road area.

"Flushing of water mains on a regular basis is necessary to remove accumulated sediment from the water pipes," McNabb said. "However, the town has not been flushed for many years because of the accumulated sediment in the Bear Hill tank, which would have been drawn into the system during flushing. With the new Scituate Hill Water Tank, that problem has been avoided and we can now begin a much needed town-wide flushing program.

Before flushing of an area takes place, the residents of the affected area will be notified by a leaflet which will be dropped at their door.

"Flushing of an area will begin about 9 p.m. each night. Before flushing of an area takes place, the residents of the affected area will be notified by a leaflet which will be dropped at their door. Also, a sign will be posted at the area to provide additional notification. Please call the Water Department at 383-0057 if you have any questions."

Residents will be advised that the flushing may cause temporary discoloration of the water, and to avoid doing washes during the flushing. The discolored water, however, is safe to drink and will not last long. If water becomes discolored, it can be cleared by running an outside faucet until the water runs clear — this will not take long and will not use too much water.

If a wash becomes discolored because of discolored water, residents are advised to pick up a bottle of "Iron Out" for free from the Water Department.

South Shore Hospital doesn't get cardiac surgery license

By Jeanne M. Rideout
JRIDEOUT@CNC.COM

Turned down by the state in the first wave of licensing to perform open heart surgery, South Shore Hospital has set its sites on acceptance in the second round, three years from now.

Hospital administrators received the word from the state Department of Public Health late Tuesday afternoon.

"While we are disappointed by the news, we also are confident that the South Shore Hospital will be approved for a cardiac surgery license in the future. The community and patients served by South Shore Hospital deserve to have open heart surgery available to them locally," Richard Pozniak, the hospital's director of public affairs, said.

In a letter to South Shore Hospital, the DPH said it was not going to grant the hospital a cardiac license because a state analysis showed that the hospital would not attract the required minimum of 300 open heart surgery procedures a year from its service area.

"We strongly disagree with the state's analysis. Our cardiac procedures would greatly exceed the state's threshold. Our data is sound and credible," Pozniak said.

This data had been included in South Shore's application to the DPH, according to Pozniak.

Six hospitals had applied to the DPH for a cardiac license. Up to three were to be approved by the DPH. The two other hospitals whose applications were rejected were declined for the same reason given to South Shore, according to Pozniak.

South Shore Hospital had received a ground swell of public support while awaiting the decision of the DPH.

More than 800 area residents had spontaneously written to Gov. Paul Cellucci asking for his help in bringing cardiac surgery to the hospital.

South Shore Hospital administrators will not challenge the action by the DPH.

"We accept the decision of the Department of Public Health. We are not taking any action whatever," Pozniak said.

On Monday, Brockton Hospital, one of the other six community hospital applicants for a cardiac license, challenged the application of contender Cape Cod Hospital, located in Hyannis, saying the application had "potential irregularities."

Brockton Hospital was turned down in its bid for a license, and Cape Cod Hospital's application has been approved.

Pozniak said that South Shore Hospital had no comment on the application of Cape Cod Hospital.

Robert Hughes, a Brockton Hospital vice president, also disagreed with the state's analysis, saying the data did not reflect the reality of its market area.

Hughes said that the number of cardiac procedures that would have been performed at Brockton Hospital would have exceeded the state's requirement, even though the number of diagnostic heart catheterizations at the facility has dropped 40 percent from 1998 to 2000.

The number of diagnostic catheterizations at South Shore Hospital met the state criteria.

The other three hospitals applying were North Shore Medical Center in Salem, Metrowest Medical Center in Framingham, and Southcoast Hospital Group's Charlton Memorial Hospital in Fall River.

North Shore Medical Center and Southcoast were the other two hospitals receiving licenses.

The three new cardiac licenses brings the number of hospitals in the state able to perform open heart surgery to 15. Most community hospitals in Massachusetts do not have a cardiac license, although community hospitals in 49 states do the procedure. Until now, the DPH had restricted this type of surgery to teaching hospitals. All but two of the hospitals previously licensed are teaching hospitals in Boston, Worcester, and Springfield.

The number of open heart surgeries in the state has dropped from 7,603 in 1997 to 7,436 in 1999, a 3.4 percent drop.

If South Shore Hospital's application had been approved, the first open heart surgery could have been performed at South Shore in January, 2002. Southcoast will be offering the procedure early next year and expects to invest up to $9 million in equipment and staffing, according to hospital officials.

South Shore Hospital's state-of-the-art catheterization lab has been up and running since 1994.

On March 27, South Shore Hospital received long-awaited state approval to perform primary angioplasty, an artery-clearing procedure. The program was launched on April 10 and is expected to benefit at least 100 patients a year. Until now, doctors at South Shore Hospital have had to send heart patients needing the procedure to a Boston hospital.

South Shore Hospital is adding a new wing to accommodate a heart surgery unit. The hospital also stands ready to make the $3.6 million investment in medical equipment needed for the facility, according to Pozniak.

A remembrance voyage

Lost lightkeepers honored through Minot cruise

By Alice Coyle
ACOYLE@WICKED.COM

April weather can be fierce.

Rather than gentle showers promising May flowers, the same northeast storms that wreak havoc along the New England coastline during the winter months, can visit their destructive winds, heavy rains and storm-tossed seas upon Cohasset and Scituate on any spring day.

Assistant lightkeepers Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine felt the full fury of a such an April storm 150 years ago this week. From their precarious perch atop the old Minot's Ledge Lighthouse, the two could only watch and wait with growing horror, as the storm that would claim both the lighthouse and their lives raged out of control for nearly five days.

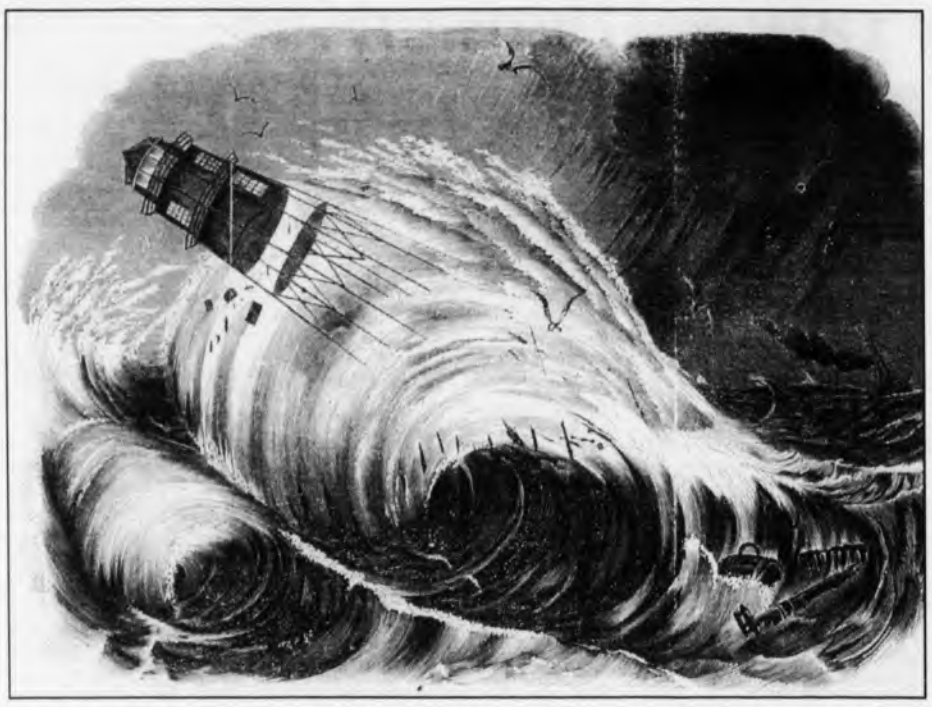
"This was the storm of that century," noted Scituate Historical Society project coordinator John Galluzzo. Before the Portland Gale blew up the coast in 1898, the storm of April 16, 1851, known as the Minot's Light Gale, was the one people recalled as the big one, he said.

Lightkeeper John Bennett had left the station for Boston the day before the storm began. It would prove lucky timing for his trip to the city. Antoine and Wilson kept the light until it finally toppled into the frenzied Atlantic. A note discovered in a bottle tossed into the ocean recounts their fears and final resignation to their fate.

"The lighthouse won't stand over to-nite. She shakes two feet each way now."

The note was signed with just their initials "JW & JA."

A century and a half later a monument stands on Cohasset's Government Island for the two men who lost their lives keeping the light, but through the loss helped bring about improved lighthouse construction.



"The lighthouse won't stand over to-nite. She shakes two feet each way now."
The note was signed with their initials "JW & JA"

"The time to mourn their loss is past," said Galluzzo. "They gave their lives so future lightkeepers wouldn't go through what they went through."

Following the Minot Gale and the destruction of the lighthouse the American Lighthouse Board began building sturdier, safer lighthouses. The current lighthouse at Minot's Ledge is constructed of granite and is no longer manned.

To honor the men, Galluzzo and fellow society fundraising committee chairman Susan Phippen have organized a sunset cruise and remembrance ceremony Monday night (April 16). The cruise aboard the Massachusetts Bay Lines catamaran "Freedom" will set sail from the town pier at 6 p.m. for the three-hour voyage back to Minot's Ledge Light where a wreath laying ceremony is planned.

Galluzzo and American Lighthouse Foundation founder Doug Bingham will provide the commentary during the cruise, which will include a buffet dinner and raffled prizes from the lighthouse foundation and the Lighthouse Depot of Wells, Maine.

This sketch depicts the destruction of the first Minot's Ledge Lighthouse destroyed 150 years ago this week in a fierce spring gale. The storm also claimed the lives of assistant lightkeepers Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine.

Galluzzo said the spacious catamaran accommodates up to 300 passengers. Already 150 tickets have been sold for the event. He said people from all over New England plan to be aboard for the trip.

"We've drawn people from New Hampshire, Connecticut, New York and Maine," he said. All proceeds from the cruise will go to benefit future historical society restoration projects at Scituate Lighthouse.

But raising funds wasn't foremost in Galluzzo and Phippen's minds when they planned the memorial cruise.

"We didn't set out to do this to make money for the society," Galluzzo said. "It was to remember these men. If we break even on this we'll be happy," he added. While a candlelight vigil was the first idea considered, Galluzzo said "'Why not go back out there, where they were that night?'"

"The time to mourn their loss is past. They gave their lives so future lightkeepers wouldn't go through what they went through."
— project coordinator John Galluzzo

And while Galluzzo is looking to remember the tragic events of that night 150 years ago, he hopes there won't be a reenactment meteorologically.

There appear to be no major nor'easters forecast in the days ahead, but with New England weather you never can tell.

"I hope we're not tempting fate," Galluzzo joked.

Tickets for the April 16 sunset cruise to Minot's Ledge Lighthouse are $40 for Scituate Historical Society members and $43 for non-members. For more information or for tickets, call the society at (781) 545-1083.

Unicorn singers

The Hingham-based Unicorn Singers, under the direction of Margo Euler, will perform John Rutter's Requiem at their upcoming spring concerts on Saturday April 28 at 8 p.m. at Hingham's House of Prayer Lutheran Church, and on Sunday April 29 at 7:30 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church in Cohasset village.

Rutter's Requiem is an elegant small scale composition well suited to the 22 voice chamber chorus, which will be joined in the performance by Sally Tucker on flute; Turner Bledsoe, oboe; Jane Hallet, cello; Lenae Badger, organ; Marcia Babcock on keyboard; and percussionist Tim Maynard. The soprano solo will be sung by Dawn MacGarvey.

The concert will also feature an exploration of well-known sacred texts such as the Ave Maria and Ave Maris Stella in various motet settings alternating with well-loved hymns and anthems in which the audience is invited to participate.

To that end, all singers who plan to attend the concert are invited to arrive 20 minutes prior to the performance for a brief rehearsal. Music will be provided.

Tickets for the concert are $10 and are available at Noble's in Hingham Square, from chorus members, by phone (781.749.6561), and at the door.

Boys net one win, one loss

Tennis team overcomes absences to take big league win over Norton

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset boys' tennis team evened their record at 1-1 this past Tuesday with a 4-1 thrashing of Norton.

The only loss of the match for the Skippers was the forfeited third singles spot due to the absence of several key team members.

"I think it is great to take all those matches the way we did today," said rookie coach Pam Wilson. "It was better than I would have expected."

Senior Erik Shea, playing at first singles, jumped on the Lancers' ace early, and never let up to come away with the win 6-1, 6-0. Ben Guigas, a short but very tough player, was unable to stop the six foot Shea at the net.

Sophomore David Ingber, in his second match as a varsity player, defeated Joe Cummings 6-3, 6-3, as both players battled one another in a consistent ground stroke battle. Ingber admitted to staying too far back in the match, forcing him to make adjustments later in the match.

"He was hitting some great drop shots," explained Ingber. "So I started to use some serve-and-volley. I usually don't rush the net as often as I did today."

Andy Cohen of Norton won third singles by default.

Senior captain Jeff Scribner and junior Joe Niessink toppled Nick Faiella and Tim Burke 6-0, 6-0, finishing their match before the first sets were even concluded in a few of the other matches. Freshmen Robert Carpenter and Jessie Brewer started their match with a 6-1 first set win, and hung on for a come-from-behind second set 7-5 victory.

"So far, the doubles teams have been very strong," said coach Wilson. The Cohasset boys have won three of their four doubles matches so far in the year.

"Jessie and Robbie had an incredible win today."

Cohasset's first match of the year, held this past Monday in Hanover, ended with Cohasset on the losing end, 3-2. Hanover is one of the top rated teams in the South Shore League, one of the few who looks primed to give six time defending champion Norwell a run for its money.

At first singles, Shea was unable to capitalize at the net against hard hitter Volam Souza. But the two will square off again when the two teams meet on May 4 in Cohasset. At second singles, senior captain Chris Golden, a missing link in the win over Norton, took down Greg Hughes, 6-4, 6-1 to give Cohasset one of its two wins.

Niessink started the match well with a 6-2 victory in the first set, but was unable to hang on against one of the top number threes in the area, Pat McCafferty. Niessink, a hard hitter, could not rediscover the stroke that had served him so well in the first set, and he lost the final two sets by identical 6-3 scores.

At first doubles, Hanover put the tall, athletic net guarders Matt Edwards and Pavri Pandian against Cohasset's combo of Scribner and Ingber.

Though neither of Cohasset's players could consistently lob over their opponents, they won all the big games, en route to a 7-6 (7-0), 3-6, 6-2 win.

Carpenter and Brewer played as good a match as they were able, but could not get past the upperclassmen tandem of Pat Hart and John Riley. The Indians took this one with twin sets of 6-3.

Girls start 2-0

The girls opened on Monday with a decisive 4-1 win over Hanover.

First and second singles players Lindsay Grossman and Julie Shea both dominated their counterparts with 6-0, 6-1 victories.

The Lady Skippers also took third singles and second doubles.

Grossman and Shea were even stronger on Tuesday at home against Norton, combining to lose just one game.

This set the tone for the Lady Skippers, who took a 5-0 decision.

Emily Sullivan and Corey Evans also had their way with their competition in first doubles, winning 6-2, 6-2.

Swinging for smaller and better things

With full team back on links this season, optimism abounds for C.H.S. duffers

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

A team of 10 will hit the links this spring for Cohasset, and, though there are still many questions, it appears there could well be a run at a South Shore League Golf Crown.

The Skippers will be led by junior Will Prendergast, the top player on the squad, and one of the best golfers in the area. Prendergast, a captain, has shot two over in both of his practice rounds to prepare for the first match-up of the season on April 23, against Carver.

"He adds nice leadership to the team," said first year coach Torin Sweeney, who has succeeded the late Clark Chatterton as head coach of the golf team. "He is kind of like a second coach."

With Prendergast matching up against the number one from the opposing towns, the rest of the line-up is uncertain. Due to the rainy conditions of late, practice time has been limited, leaving the top six far from determined.

"Will is going to be our number one, but after that, it is pretty open," said Sweeney, who has only had two practices with his team so far.

As it stands right now, designations two through number five will be taken by (in no particular order) senior Ted Gledhill and juniors Will Moody, Jay Bertovich and David Bouchard.

"They are going to be pretty tight," said Sweeney of the closeness in skill among these four. "We need to play a few more practice rounds to see."

Vying for the number six spot, as well as the two alternate roster spots will be sophomores Gregory Griffin-O'Brien, Rob Lehr, Chris McKenna, Terry Hurley and Mike Calorio. It is still too early to tell, however, who will be playing where.

"They are all pretty close," affirmed the coach.

Unfortunately, there were no freshman recruits this year, but there was a tremendous response at the Middle School, with 20 seventh and eight graders turning out.

Sweeney, also an assistant football coach in the fall and the varsity wrestling coach in the winter, covers a wide range of sports. But he is quick to point out that the knowledge he brings to the golf course is surprisingly similar to what he brings to the field and the mat.

"Golf is just as intense," he asserted. "It isn't a contact sport, but it is a real mental game. I think I can bring that to the kids."

Though last year was not a suc-

Scituate's O'Connell named High Honorable mention

The 18 individuals you see honored here are the ones we determined through research and personal observation to be the top high school hockey players in Marinerland (i.e. Abington, Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Kingston, Marshfield, Norwell, Pembroke, Rockland and Scituate).

As you might imagine, this was no easy task. Several of the players you see recognized here as High Honorable Mentions received serious consideration for All-Scholastic honors. Cohasset's talented sophomore Greg O'Connell, the Skippers' leading scorer this season and a Pilgrim Conference All-Star, was among the more difficult omissions.

Likewise, Honorable Mentions Matt Davis and Dan Kinchla, a forward and goalie for C.H.S., were strong candidates to receive High Honorable Mention status.

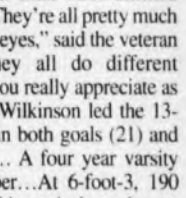
Cohasset's Greg O'Connell, seen here ripping off a slapper, was named a High Honorable Mention to our team.

First team

Marc Smith - Defenseman
Senior - Hanover

Few will argue the point that the Div. 3 state champion Indians' were led first and foremost this season by their stellar defensive unit…Fewer still would refute the assertion that Smith was widely regarded as the most valuable player on this invaluable backline…Is heavily regarded by Hanover coach Jim Sylvia as being one of the "best defensemen on the South Shore"… Along with blueliners Joe Jackson, Ryan Carr, Nick Bolger, and fellow Mariner All-Scholastic Greg DiTullio, the 5'10", 165-pound Smith helped lead the team to a 9-0 shutout against North Middlesex in the Div. 3 state final…Also a great playmaker as evidenced by his 21 assists, seven goals for 28 points this year… has played hockey year round, including summer league play with the Bay State Breakers…Has been accepted to Westfield State, which has a strong hockey program. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "He was a real leader out there. He's a great player, very physical. He's like a wall out there. He'll be tough to lose."



Marc Smith

Anthony Forgione - Forward
Senior (Capt.) - Hingham

Has been the Harbormen's top scorer for the last three years, leading Hingham to a first-ever Div. 1 state championship this year…The 5'11", 193-pound forward racked up 49 points on 23 goals, 26 assists…Scored a crucial goal in the Div. 1 final to tie the game when Hingham was down 3-2…Career stats find the senior with 113 points on 55 goals, 58 assists…Was on Hingham's penalty kill and power play units…Forgione won his team's Most Valuable Player and Seventh Player Awards this year…Had a four-goal regular season game against Norwood, who Hingham later defeated in the Div. 1 sectional final. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "In all our key situations, he's it. At the end of the game, he's our go-to guy. He's a target for other teams, but he's still able to play well and stay out of the box, and that's a pretty good combination."

Dave Wilkinson - Forward
Senior (Capt.) - Silver Lake

Wilkinson is representing not only his school with this selection, but also his linemates, Matt Troup and Jason Rogers… This trio combined for an eye-popping 96 points this season, and coach Bill Donovan simply could not or would not discern between these three talented seniors… "They're all pretty much equal in my eyes," said the veteran coach. "They all do different things that you really appreciate as a coach."…Wilkinson led the 13-6-1 Lakers in both goals (21) and points (35)… A four year varsity team member…At 6-foot-3, 190 pounds, Wilkinson is the archetypal power forward, but also possesses excellent skating and stick handling skills…was equally dangerous in the open ice as he was clogging up the front of the net…netted three hat tricks this season…his numbers would've no doubt been ever better if he hadn't been forced to play the final few weeks of the season with a cast on his right hand protecting a broken bone… Wilkinson would like to play college hockey, and will do just that if he accepts an offer from Suffolk University…is still considering playing junior hockey next year rather than attending college…he has an upcoming tryout with the Boston Harborwolves…Old Colony League All-Star…Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic…Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan: "Dave just has all the skills you want from a big forward. And he's tough too.

Dave Wilkinson

HOCKEY, PAGE 14

He showed that playing with the broken bone. He did whatever he had to get on the ice."

Mike McNulty - Center
Junior (Capt.) - Hanover

Mike McNulty

A lethal combination of size, strength, speed, and hockey talent, McNulty was the leading scorer for the Div. 3 state champion Indians, racking up 43 points on 24 goals, 25 assists…The 6'3", 180-pound first-liner scored two goals in Hanover's 9-0 shutout of North Middlesex in the Div. 3 final, capping an undefeated 24-0-2 season…Was the team's top penalty killer and was on the top power play unit…Combined with first-liners Dan Breda and Jesse Ferraro for one of the most productive offenses in the state…Will be among the top returnees next year. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "He's a great strong forward. He's got strong hands and a good shot. He's difficult to knock off the puck because he's so strong. When you say McNulty, you say Dan Breda and Jesse Ferraro in the same breath. They did an excellent job together. I'm glad we'll have them all back next year."

Mike Cavanaugh - Defenseman
Senior (Capt.) - Hingham

Mike Cavanaugh

The two-year captain was a spark plug on defense for the Div. 1 state champion Harbormen… At 6', 200-pounds, Cavanaugh was Hingham's biggest defenseman on the ice…Tallied 18 points on three goals, 15 assists this year, adding to his 50 career points…A favorite among his teammates, Cavanaugh earned the Most Valuable Player and Best Defenseman awards…The All-star is currently undecided about his future plans, however he is considering attending prep school and would like to play hockey at a Div. 1 college. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He was our leader on defense. He's an extremely hard worker, moves the puck well and is a top-flank defenseman. He's a great player."

John Lynch - Goalie
Junior - Hingham

John Lynch

Had a stellar 2001 campaign in the net for the Div. 1 state champs, boasting a 2.14 goals against average…The 6'1", 152-pounder posted a number of shutouts during the season against powerhouses like Springfield Cathedral and Arlington Catholic (30 saves) in the Falmouth Tourney, and a 3-0 shutout against Norwood in the Div. 1 South Sectional final, and a 5-0 shutout against Weymouth in the sectional semifinals…Also kept Hingham in the running early in the tourney with stellar performances in two close overtime wins over Framingham and Dedham…As his stats prove, Lynch more than adequately filled the void left by three-year Harbormen starter Kevin McGowan, who graduated last year. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "As the year went on John really improved. He had some big shoes to fill with Kevin gone, and he worked hard all year. He had some great games in the tourney with some overtime wins and shutouts, and in the state final. It was a heck of a way to finish the year."

Second team

Tim Duggan – Defense
Senior (Capt.) - Scituate

The one player coach Mike Breen called "absolutely irreplaceable" this season…the two time Pilgrim Conference All-Star was a crucial steadying influence for the predominantly younger Sailors that shocked virtually all close observers with their second place finish in the Pilgrim Conference (behind Div. 3 state champion Hanover) with a 12-6-2 record…voted the Sailors Most Valuable Player…finished his four year career with 66 points (10 goals and 56 assists)…Point totals had relatively little to do with his value to the team, however; defense was the name of his game, as his astounding plus 28 rating through 20 games clearly indicates…Though there is no count kept for this statistic, it seems safe to say that no player in Marinerland blocked more shots this season than Duggan, who constantly dove in front of shots with little or no regard for his own well being (of course, the fact that he had his little brother Joe behind him in net much of the time might have had something to do with that)… also the captain of the baseball team, for which he pitches and plays the outfield… plans to play either baseball or hockey in college… still weighing his college options, with Bryant being among the possibilities…Scituate coach Mike Breen: "You take Tim off of our team, and I don't know if we'd have even made the tourney. He was just as valuable off the ice with his leadership as he was on it."

Tim Duggan

Kevin Olson - Center
Junior (Capt.) - Hingham

Was the Div. 1 state champion Harbormen's leading playmaker this year, boasting 22 assists, 10 goals for 32 points…The 5'9", 165-pounder netted a goal and had an assist in the 5-4 victory over St. John's in the Div. 1 state final…Has scored 66 points in three years for Hingham…Was on Hingham's power play and penalty kill units…Teammates think very highly of Olson, awarding him the Team Contribution award. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He and (Anthony) Forgione were our key guys on offense. He was a great captain and he did a good job for us this year. He always hustles. He's a very smart player and also plays good defense."

Adam Keeler - Forward
Junior - Marshfield

Adam Keeler

Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan said Keeler will be the top skater in the Old Colony League when Marshfield makes the jump next year… A highly-speedy right wing, Keeler was the Rams leading scorer this year with 38 points on 23 goals, 15 assists…Was third in the Atlantic Coast League in scoring…Helped lead Marshfield to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 state tourney, where the Rams suffered a tough 4-3 loss to ACL rival Whitman/Hanson…The 5'10", 170-pounder was Marshfield's top penalty killer and was on the top power play unit…Keeler had a great game against Sandwich, in which he scored two shorthanded goals on the same shift…Was recently selected to Team Massachusetts, which takes the top hockey talent to represent the state in a national tourney in Chicago…Was also a member of Marshfield's Div. 1 Eastern Mass. champion soccer team and plays baseball. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Adam is the fastest skater around. He was certainly the fastest forward in the ACL and always plays at top speed. He plays all out, every game. He plays every shift just as hard. He also has a great vision of the ice. He knows what to do and where to be."

Jason Ferris - Forward
Senior (Capt.) - Hanover

Jason Ferris

Was the second leading scorer on the Div. 3 state champion Indians squad, racking up 43 points on 18 goals, 25 assists…The 5'9", 170-pound forward scored four goals in Hanover's 9-0 win over North Middlesex in the Div. 3 final…All in all in the tourney this year, Ferris scored 11 points on six goals and five assists…Along with fellow second-liners Rich MacAllister and Mike Colombus, Ferris was a huge offensive threat in the tourney, combining for 36 points between the three…Ferris would like to continue his hockey career in college. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "Jason was just a leader all the way. His leadership led us to the state championship. He really brought his line along nicely. When you talk about him, you talk about (Rich) MacAllister and (Mike) Colombus. Those guys were like having two first lines."

Ben Spitz- Defense
Junior (Capt.) - Norwell

Ben Spitz

An amazingly powerful and fluid skater, Spitz tallied 23 points (12 goals, 11 assists) in 19 games this season for the Clippers… Though his primary responsibilities were at the defensive end, Spitz picked up his offense in the post-season, scoring five times in the final three tourney games…had a hand in all four of the Clippers goals (three goals, one assist) in the quarterfinal win over Bishop Stang and semifinal loss to eventual state champion Hanover… Ben's electrifying end-to-end rushes have drawn comparisons to Bobby Orr from more than a few longtime local hockey fans…not bad, considering hockey is Ben's second favorite sporting activity…one of New England's most accomplished high school golfers, Ben is being recruited by several major collegiate Div. 1 golf programs…missed five hockey games this season in order to participate in golf tournaments… Norwell coach Paul Hurley: "As far as I'm concerned, Ben is the best skater and stickhandler in this league. When he makes up his mind to get somewhere, he's really tough to stop. He's also just a really smart player."

Marisa Hourihan - Goalie
Senior - Hanover

Marisa Hourihan

Finished a stellar 2001 campaign in her first year as Hanover's starting keeper…Fronted by a stellar defense, Hourihan posted 12 shutouts this season…The 5'5", 128-pounder allowed just 26 goals in 26 games…Hourihan has participated in Hockey Night in Boston, capturing the MVP goalie award…A star midfielder on Hanover's field hockey team, Hourihan was a Mariner All-Scholastic last fall…She also is the starting catcher on the softball squad…Hourihan is currently considering a number of colleges, at which she would like to play Div. 1 women's hockey, most-likely at Northeastern University. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "It takes a very special person to step into a situation like this, and she is just that. She really got better as the season went on and in those last four games, she really stepped up. Once she got some confidence, she was playing the type of hockey we expected from her. She just sparkled."

Third Team

Matt Hall- Forward

Matt Hall

An absolutely stunning non-selection to the Pilgrim Conference All-Star team…Hall was not only the leading scorer on the 12-6-2 Sailors this season with 27 points, but he was in the eyes of some their MVP… The only explanation for the snubbing is that he came out of virtually no where in his sophomore year… After playing on a third line as a freshman and scoring single digit points, Matt worked hard in the off-season to improve his game playing in the New England College Development League… At 6-feet, 170 pounds, Hall blends size and strength with a well rounded game, good skating skills and a blistering shot… His point total undoubtedly would have been higher if he'd not been forced to play extensively on defense after a knee injury put blueliner Will Falaro on the shelf for three weeks…While this move may have cut into his numbers production, it clearly illustrated his considerable value to the team…Plays hockey year round…is presently trying out for the elite Bay State Sharks program… also plays baseball at Scituate High…Scituate coach Mike Breen: "Matt has everything you'd want in a hockey player—size, smarts, hustle, a great attitude—and he's a great kid too. His ability to go back and play defense really bailed us out this year. Hopefully, we should be able to leave him alone at forward next year, where I'm sure he'll have a huge year."

Rob Himberg – Forward
Junior - Norwell

Rob Himberg

A brilliant skater and playmaker with great hockey instincts who often seemed a half step ahead of everyone else on the ice…led Norwell in scoring with 40 points (15 goals, 25 assists)...voted team's Most Valuable Player…became the fastest player in the eight year history Of Norwell High hockey to reach 100 points… a Pilgrim Conference All-Star… 5'10"- 155 pounds…adopted a more physical style in the post-season during the Clippers run to the South Sectional semi-finals…of particular note were bone jarring hits in the quarterfinals to Bishop Stang's two best players…plays hockey year round as a member of the Bay State Breakers and South Shore Dynamos…also plays on the Norwell High golf team… Norwell coach Paul Hurley: "Rob can carry the puck with anyone, and he's got real good playmaking instincts. When he added that physical play in the tourney, he really helped make us a different team."

Matt Morrissey - Forward
Senior- Abington/E. Bridgewater

Matt Morrissey

Flashy playmaker and scorer who helped lead the Green Wave back into the tourney after a five year absence… transferred from B.C. High after his sophomore year…finished his two year career at Abington High with 72 points (49 goals, 23 assists), including 31 this season (22 goals, nine assists)… will either go to prep school or play junior hockey next year…he's talked to the Walpole Stars and Junior Bruins…May go to college after that, where he'd also like to play hockey…Also plays football and baseball at Abington High, though her says hockey is "by far" his first love… Unfortunately, he tore ligaments in his ankle in a collision at first base in the second baseball game this spring and will be lost for the remainder of the season...insists he should be ready for next hockey season, however, wherever that may be….Abington coach Anthony Sulmonte: "Matt has the full package of offensive skills. He's a very talented skater with excellent hands and instincts, and has a very strong shot whether it's a slapper or a wrist shot. He's also a tough kid. With the skills he has, he was a marked man out there a lot of times, but he never backed down and he handled it well."

Brian Libby - Defense
Senior (Capt.) - Silver Lake

Brian Libby

The most amazing aspect of Libby's story this season is that he even made it on to the ice…After leading the Lakers in scoring as a sophomore, Brian missed most of his junior season with a torn anterior cruciate ligament in his knee that required reconstructive surgery last spring… started this season slowly, and was used at forward rather than at his customary defenseman position in order to protect the repaired knee from heavy contact and pivoting…Lakers coach Bill Donovan said "The turning point" in this season was moving Libby back to defense four games into the season… finished fifth on the Lakers in scoring this season with 20 points (four goals, 16 assists)… OCL All-Star…plays hockey year round…used to play soccer and baseball, but his knee injury prohibits him from activities in which running is required…Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan: "Brian was a horse for us this season. Even though his mobility never got back to where it was before the surgery this season, he was still just about impossible to get around. He did a great job with positioning and his stick. He's just a great instinctive hockey player at both ends of the ice. He has a great knack for knowing when to rush the puck, when to dish off and when to lay back."

Greg DiTullio - Defenseman

Greg DiTullio

At 6'2", 180 pounds, DiTullo was one of the biggest men on the ice for Hanover… The hard-hitting defenseman scored 26 points this season on 10 goals, 16 assists…Played a stellar game against North Middlesex in the Div. 3 state finals, aiding in the team's impressive 9-0 shutout…Along with defensemen Nick Bolger, Ryan Carr, Joe Jackson, and fellow All-Scholastic Marc Smith, DiTullio was part of one of the most dominant bluelines the state…DiTullio is planning to attend Mass. Maritime Academy, where he will study Marine Transport. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "He's part of the best defensive core I've ever coached. He's a very physical player, who's difficult to get around."

Buddy Johnson - Goalie
Senior - Silver Lake

Consistency is the name of the game for Johnson, who backstopped the Lakers to a 13-6-1 record this season… Johnson had an Old Colony League best goals against average of 1.9 as a junior…followed that up with a solid 2.5 g.a.a. this season…the higher average this season had to do with a tougher schedule, more shots and the fact that he played on a sprained ankle down the stretch…A true "stand up" goalie with a great glove hand…plays hockey year round… took part in the Hockey Night in Boston league this summer… is presently leaning towards offers to play junior hockey next season…Toronto, of the World Junior Hockey League, has offered him a tryout… Silver Lake coach Bill Donovan: Buddy has a great glove hand, and keeps his feet under him, which I always like in a goalie. But what really impresses me about him is that he's a great goalie to play in front of. He's never one of those goalies who gets on his teammates when they blow an assignment or make a mistake that causes a goal. He's real supportive of his teammates."

Youth Lacrosse teams on a roll

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program continued its strong start to the season on Sunday, April 8, with three of four teams winning during the second weekend of Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League play.

The day started with the Cohasset White Under-12 team jumping out to a fast start against a Falmouth team that was short on substitutes but long on effort.

Michael Grimm scored two quick unassisted goals to give Cohasset a lead, then assisted on one of Austen Lanzillotti's two first-period goals as Cohasset jumped out to a 4-0 lead. Falmouth narrowed the count with two goals before Grimm finished his hat trick and closed the first quarter at 5-2.

Falmouth cut the lead to 6-4 before Lanzillotti completed his hat trick on an assist from Grimm to give Cohasset a two-goal halftime lead. Justin Hollis made four first-half saves in the Cohasset goal.

The two teams traded goals to start the third period, with Jeff Brown — who had assisted on one of Lanzillotti's earlier goals — scoring for Cohasset. Falmouth, however, narrowed the gap just before the buzzer and the quarter ended at 7-6.

With Falmouth seeming to snatch the momentum and energy, Cohasset's defensive core of Patrick Flynn, Kyle Pinkus, Kurt Gritzan and an assortment of middies, kept Falmouth at bay, while the attack combination of Peter Oswald and Chris Rose took over. Oswald scored two unassisted goals before Rose made a great individual effort, racing from behind the cage and unloading a shot right before a Falmouth player unloaded on him. Moments later, Rose scooped a ball at the midfield, headed for the net and flipped a pass to Oswald, whose third goal of the game put the contest out of reach.

Falmouth scored one late goal, but Jared Dick, who made six saves in the second half, shut the door and sent the visitors home on the short end of an 11-7 final.

The Cohasset Blue U-12 team took the field next, against a stubborn and physical Abington squad.

Abington jumped out to a 1-0 lead and kept Cohasset off the board in the first quarter. That changed in the second period, when Michael Bunstein broke free for two unassisted tallies to give Cohasset a 2-1 lead that stood up through halftime.

Cohasset broke the game open in the third period, with Bunstein scoring his third goal on an assit from Nick Zappolo, right before Zappolo scored one on his own. Matt Burgess and Peter Ernst scored unassisted goals, and Charlie Czerkawski got credit for his first goal of the season after pressuring Abington into mistakenly putting the ball into its own net. Czerkawski got credit for the score as the Cohasset player closest to the cage when the ball went in.

Ahead 7-1, Cohasset seemed to relax in the fourth quarter, and Abington popped in three quick goals. Bunstein, however, scored two and Robert Silvia — seeing his first-ever action at attack — scored one to close out the game at 10-4. Sam Parker had six first-half saves for the Blue squad, with Oliver Brennan making three stops in the second half.

Cohasset's U-14 team took the field next, beating Abington 11-5 in a sloppy, wet game that was marred by far too many penalties on both sides of the ball.

Jake Previte pulled double duty and played the first half in goal and the second half at attack. Jake was the consummate team player, making several nice stops in goal in the first half and scoring twice in the second half.

Sam Steele had several strong feeds, including a laser beam through three Abington players to Aidan Buick for the score. The scoring parade was led be Chris Barber's three goals. Billy Carbone, John Grimm, Sam Steele and Buick all had at least one tally.

Mike Pecca was dominant on ground balls from the defensive end and led several fast breaks with his scooping and passing. Kirby Bukowski, Casey Coleman, and Leo Clougherty shut down the Abington attack, along with goalie Chris Simms in the second half.

Midfielders Mark Donovan, Colin Regan, Mike Martone, Joey Durkin, Zach Etkind, and Trevor Brady helped control play with strong defense and dominated the ground balls. Jonathan Littauer, playing for the first time this year, showed great hustle and determination.

That led to the day's finale and only loss, with Scituate dominating the Cohasset U-10 team, 15-8. Scituate jumped out to an early 5-1 lead, leaving Cohasset to play from behind all afternoon.

Chris Brown and Owen Landon scored twice apiece as Cohasset struggled to get back into the game. Dean Driscoll, John Kearney, Max Shipp and Geoff Evans also scored for Cohasset.

With the team's regular netminders missing, Brown and Ian Quinlan shared the goaltending duties, standing up all day to a relentless Scituate offense.

Another highlight for the Cohasset squad was some fine team midfield play from Eamon Davis, Gabriella Flibotte and Andrew Bell. The Cohasset youth program takes the field next on April 22, when all four teams will be on the road at arch-rival Hingham.

Swinging for smaller and better things

cessful one, the team return its full squad, which Sweeney sees as a real plus.

"They have all played before, and they all have the potential to shoot in the low 40's," reported Sweeney.

(Not to worry, the golf team does not have superhuman golfing abilities; the players shoot nine hole matches, not the full 18.)

"I think we will be good," offered Sweeney. "We shoot low enough to be in every match." The Skippers will have their work cut out for them, though, with some stiff competition in the SSL this year. The toughest appears to be defending Div. 2 EMass champion Norwell, led by two time Div. 2 Massachusetts golfer of the year Ben Spitz.

"They are probably the team to beat," conceded Sweeney.

Cohasset will have to hang tough in every match this year, especially since there will be no non-league contests. Part of the reason for this is that a majority of Massachusetts high schools play golf in the fall. In fact, Cohasset, and the entire South Shore League will be switching to fall play next school year.

This move may prove to be a negative one for the Skippers, as it was for many area teams this past fall, with five of the returning members being forced to choose between golf and their previous fall athletics. Of course, it does mean that the athletes who were tied up in the spring will be free to join the team.

In either season, the team will have its home matches at the Cohasset Country Club, widely acknowledged as one of the nicest on the South Shore.

Jeff Cavanaro completes road race

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Here we are finally into the beginning of Spring with a lot of fun and excitement throughout the schools. In want to send a special congratulations to all of the students and staff who ran in the recent road race. A special congratulations goes out to a second-grader, Jeff Cavanaro, who ran the entire race with his dad. What a great accomplishment for such a young little guy.

It is not too early to start planning for Memorial Day Weekend and this year, Cohasset is making the plans easy. On Friday, May 25, a great family concert is being held at the Sullivan Gym at CHS to start off the weekend. This concert is being performed by the a cappella group, "Ball in the House." Six guys, six very talented voices and no instruments! This awesome event is being sponsored by the Deer Hill fifth grade and is bound to be the start of a yearly family event.

This wonderful and amazing group has toured with 98 Degrees, N'Sync, Paula Cole, just to name a few. Make sure to buy your tickets early from any fifth grader in town, it is going to be great!

Now, after that wonderful night of entertainment is over, what do you think about a "50 year class reunion" with teachers, alumni, friends and family all held at CHS/Middle School in honor of the 50th birthday of the school? That's right, on Saturday, May 26, come reminisce at CHS before it becomes history.

There will be memorabilia, entertainment for all, tours and refreshments and is going to be just a wonderful way to celebrate the school and town pride! Anyone who has memorabilia to donate or any questions can call: Jeanne Quigley at 383-1573 or Karen Golden Oronte at 383-6737. Sunday is a great day to plan a cook-out or clambake with the many friends and alumni from your year. Start the plans now and before you know it, a mini-reunion is made. On Monday of course, everyone will be watching our wonderful parade and then all can follow it to a cookout being held at the Lightkeepers on Cohasset Harbor. See you there!

All students and parents, don't forget,(not likely!) that tomorrow(Good Friday) there is no school and that next week is VACATION!!! Have a great one.

We wanted to send out a special congratulations to the Sixth Grade Girls basketball team. The team played a great season, right down to the very last game where the last in the final few minutes. A team celebration was held on Thursday evening, March 29th at the Atlantica from 7-8:30. The entire team, along with coaches, parents and siblings were on hand for a wonderful meal and togetherness. Last November, this team started as a nice group of individual kids who had never played together as a team. My March, they thought as a team, played as a team with the attitude of "what can I do to help my team win?" Each girl received a well-deserved trophy for their hard work, wonderful progress and a very strong finish. They came a very long way for their first season together! Congratulations!

There is a Professional Day coming up on Monday, May 7 with no school! Make sure to mark it on your calendars.

Have any of you often thought about The Cohasset PSO and what it is and/or what its function is? The Parent School Organization was founded in the 1980's in an effort to represent the parents of the Cohasset School System and to bring forward issues pertaining to all schools in the district. All parents with children in the Cohasset School System are part of the PSO. Over the years, the PSO has evolved into a very active organization with representatives covering all of the schools, as well as special functions covering such areas as METCO, special needs, community relations, curriculum enrichment and fund raising. This April, the PSO is announcing a major restructuring of the organization. Instead of one centralized PSO directing the activities at all schools, we are preparing to develop at each school and individual PSO. This is a model that is followed by many other school systems. Our hope is that this new structure will provide both a greater opportunity for parents to participate in the schools as well as an avenue to address issues that are of particular interest to them.

There will be the opportunity for all of you, moms and dads alike to take full part in this organization and help at any of the schools. The Deer Hill will host a PSO Job Fair on Wednesday, April 25 from 9:30-10:30 a.m. and again that evening from 7:30-8:30 p.m.. The Osgood will also hold a PSO Job Fair with the date and time to be announced.

Please make sure to read all notices and letters that will be coming home with all children in the schools. The opportunities are definitely there for all of you to take part in this exciting and interesting organization and is the best way to stay involved with the schools.

The METCO program would like to let everyone know that the seventh- and eighth-grade students have found some wonderful families to host them. Thank you to everyone involved.

That is all for this week's column. Please send any news, upcoming dates of meetings or events or any other related school item to me in one of the following ways: mail: 622 CJC Highway; email: jenpiep@yahoo.com; phone: 781-923-1057; fax: 781-923-1035 (call me first).

Have a great week! The next column of Schools In is scheduled for April 26. Please have all your information to me no later than Friday, April 20.

POLICE BRIEFS

Police arrested 13 in March

March was a relatively quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department, Police Chief Brain Noonan said. There were 13 arrests, four for Possession of Class D Substance, three for Minor Transporting, two for Disorderly Conduct, two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor, one for Operating after License had been Suspended, and finally one for Warrants. In addition four Criminal Complaints were applied for.

There were no Breaking & Enterings reported during the month of March, Noonan said..

In the month of March the police department investigated 12 motor vehicle accidents, four of which resulted in injuries. There were 184 Motor Vehicles Citations issued totaling $6,035.04 in fines. Additionally, there were 64 parking tickets issued for $2,125 in fines.

Also in the month of March the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 804 calls for police services, of those 117 were Emergency 9-1-1 calls.

Sergeant John Conte completed an intensive two week Basic Sergeants Training School sponsored by the Massachusetts Criminal Justice Council on March 30, Patrolman Christy J. Tarantino was appointed as Safety Officer for the department. Finally in the month of March Officer James Mclean was hired under the COPS MORE 2000 grant. This Federal Grant provides $75,000 dollars over three years to fund this position.

Arrest for OUI

Police arrested a 49-year-old Marshfield man and put his wife in protective custody just after midnight Saturday morning.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said an officer witnessed John Morris, 49, of 109 Gotham Hill Drive, travelling well below the speed limit southbound on Route 3A. The officer said the car was being driven erratically and was swerving back and forth across the yellow line. The officer followed the vehicle and activated the cruiser siren, lights and finally the loud speaker but Morris apparently continued to travel southbound. Finally the vehicle was boxed in by three cruisers.

Morris was arraigned Monday in Quincy District Court on charges of operating under the influence of liquor; operating recklessly as to endanger; failure to stop for a police officer; failure to stay within marked lanes; operating a motor vehicle without a license in his possession; operating without headlights; and having alcohol in an open container.

A pre-trial hearing is slated for May 25, Jackson said.

Letters in the attic

Memories of mom inspire Hingham author's first novel

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

When Hingham resident Daniel Harris retired from Proctor and Gamble in October, 1998, he and his wife Joy were both concerned he would turn into a "couch potato."

But things didn't quite work out as that way. Having just published his first novel "Goodbye, Dearie," Harris isn't resting on his laurels or anything else — he has two more books on the horizon and an idea brewing for a fourth.

"I don't think I could've ever written a book if I wasn't retired," Harris said. "I admire those people who can hold down a job and write at the same time. I didn't realize how much time I'd have on my hands—when you retire, your world shrinks a little. It's so much different than the business world."

Harris said in a way, he backed himself into writing "Goodbye, Dearie."

"When I retired, all my friends kept asking me, 'What are you going to do?' I heard myself saying back to them, 'I'm going to write a book.' After that, I said to myself, 'Geez, I better do this.'"

And he did.

Harris said "Goodbye Dearie" is an autobiographical tale of his life in the 1950s and 1960s which takes place on the South Shore, in Boston, and on Cape Cod.

"It focuses on a lot of things," Harris said. "I'd label it as a family saga spanning two generations. It not only talks about the first 26 years of my life, but it also addresses aspects of my mom's life. Really, the central idea of the story is about a family in New England, and like any family, they have their share of hard times."

Harris said another aspect of the book are the various Red Sox seasons from 1950-1967.

"The book really isn't about the Red Sox—but the Red Sox exist in vignettes throughout it," he said.

"Goodbye Dearie" begins with the death of Harris' mother, and in fact, her recent death was the event which inspired the writing of the story in the first place.

"Before I had any idea what kind of story I wanted to write, my brother and I were cleaning out the attic at my mom's house at the Cape after she died," he said. "When we were doing that, I came across a box of her old letters, to and from various people. I ended up reading all the letters instead of cleaning out the attic."

Harris said the letters all very humorous. He described his mother as a joyful person who was "quite a character" — a character good enough on which to base a story.

"Those letters were so hilarious," he said. "When I was looking through all that stuff, I also came across one of her yearbooks. I started getting the idea that I would write some sort of family history for my kids."

But when he sat down and started writing, the words which flowed didn't turn into a historical narrative. They turned into a story. Eventually, while he was writing it, Harris blended some of the autobiographical material from his life with some other elements.

> "When I retired, all my friends kept asking me, 'What are you going to do?' I heard myself saying back to them, 'I'm going to write a book.' After that, I said to myself, 'Geez, I better do this.'"
> Author Daniel Harris

Hingham author Daniel Harris hasn't taken much of a break since retiring. The prolific writer has penned and published his first book "Goodbye, Dearie" and has two others on the way.

"There's a lot of fiction in this book," he said. "A lot of the material in it is based on funny stories I've heard over the years."

But the title of the book comes from a non-fictional incident. Harris said many years ago, his mother was "speeding down old Route 28" on the Cape, and when she came around a corner, there was a cop sitting there on the side of the road.

"The cop had two people pulled over already," Harris said. He said when the police officer saw his mother speeding around the corner, he yelled at her, telling her to pull over as well. But as Harris' mother passed, she simply waved to the officer and said "Hello Dearie!"

Harris said the book was named "Goodbye Dearie" as a tribute to his mom.

"It isn't Hemingway," Harris said of the novel, "but I think it's a good yarn, which is what I was trying to write in the first place. I wanted to write something where people reading it would laugh out loud, but at the same time, I wanted to write a book people couldn't put down.

"It's only one person's story," Harris said. "But it's kind of a reflection of us all."

Harris said in addition to writing "Goodbye Dearie," he has a detective novel coming out in the near future called "Capital Crimes." He also finished a third book called "Diary of a Madhouse Husband," and he says he has "a wonderful idea for a fourth book."

Which is not bad for someone worried about becoming a couch potato.

"At least I'm not suffering from writer's block," Harris quipped.

A Boston native, Harris lived grew up in several suburban towns including Newton and Sudbury, but also lived in New Jersey and Ohio for a time. After graduating from the University of Virginia in 1964, Harris served as a military police lieutenent in Vietnam. After the war he began work with Proctor and Gamble all over the country and eventually about a decade ago returned to the area to Proctor and Gamble's Braintree headquarters and his cozy home in Hingham.

With his first work published and others on the way, Harris said his writing success has given him a new confidence since his retirement.

"There's hope out there for all writers," he said. "You have to be ready to deal with publishers sending you rejection letter after rejection letter. But if I could write something and get it published with no agent and no connections, anyone can."

A hoe down for the arts

Red Lion hall to host South Shore Art Center benefit

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Dust off your boots and that 10 gallon hat, and dig up those books about line-dancing you never read. The South Shore Art Center is having a "hoe down" April 28 and you're invited.

The annual fundraiser for the Cohasset-based art center is being held this year at Lion's Hall, the newly refurbished barn behind the Red Lion Inn in Cohasset Village. Attire for the $125 per person event is country-western and so too, is the menu.

"We'll be the first group to use the new building," said art center publicity and development director Monica McKenney. The building has been under construction for the past year.

McKenney said the evening promises to be a rootin'-tootin' good time. The large buffet planned includes a roasted suckling pig, quesadillas, chilled bean salad, fennel and carrot slaw and marinated chicken.

Entertainment for the night will come from the legendary Fat City Band booked to play throughout the night.

To encourage party-goers to get into the spirit of the evening the Red Lion Inn is giving away a weekend at the inn for the best, most original western wear.

Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide is looking forward to opening his elegant new hall to a crowd.

"We're considering this party to be the official opening of Lion's Hall," said Ordelheide. "We're expecting about 400 people."

Ordelheide described the new building as a "three-story" barn with various facilities within. The function hall of the building is located on the first floor.

"There's some beautiful chandeliers in there," he said, "and the bar is actually an old ship which has been built into a bar. This should be one of the greatest parties of the year in Cohasset."

Ordelheide said he decided to hold the upcoming fundraiser at Lion's Hall because he wants to give back to the Town of Cohasset. He said he plans on holding fundraisers for other organizations in the future. He noted he is an art enthusiast, and he wants to have a hand in supporting art-oriented programs at the art center.

"Our goal for the country-western party is to raise $30,000," he said. "The reason for the country western theme is because the place is a barn…an elegant barn."

McKenney said $30,000 would be a welcome contribution to the art center.

"One-third of our budget depends on donations," she said. "We get a certain amount of money through tuition fees, but that doesn't cover all of our costs. We really rely on this kind of funding. We also have a special events committee at the art center which helps coordinate these kinds of functions."

Elegant is the only way to describe the new Lion's Hall at the Red Lion Inn in Cohasset. The newly renovated facility will open to a crowd of 400 expected to attend the upcoming South Shore Art Center benefit party.

McKenney credits committee co-chairmen Eleanor Bleakie, Jennifer Dean and Stephanie Middleton who worked very hard to "round up" the country-western bash.

"This will help with many aspects of the art center's programming," McKenney added. "It will help to bring more wonderful exhibitions to the art center, because mounting them is very expensive." She noted that the fundraiser will also assist in maintaining the art center's two major outreach programs, "Arts To Go," and "Looking at Art."

McKenney said Lion's Hall is the perfect location for the event.

"It's a building that was just made to have big parties in," she said, "and I do think this is going to be a wonderful party. The Fat City Band is a guarantee for a rocking evening. They're as much fun to watch as they are to dance to. There will also be a lot of great food there. It'll be a fabulous evening to benefit an excellent cause."

Tickets for the benefit party are $125 each and are available at the South Shore Art Center on Main Street in Cohasset, or by calling (781) 383-ARTS to reserve tickets. Tickets are also available through the art center's website at www.ssac.org.

Lemonade

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Store-bought lemonade is, well, undrinkable yet almost nobody makes lemonade from scratch. The reason? My guess is that few of us have taste memories of what lemonade should taste like when properly made — subtle, refreshing; neither too sweet nor bitter. Having had the real thing on a few occasions, I knew that time spent searching for the perfect recipe was worth the effort.

The problem with lemonade is one of balance. It is often bitter, but more often it is too sweet. The perfect lemonade, however, balances fresh lemon flavor with just enough sugar to allow the flavor to blossom without becoming saccharine. In addition, extracting lemon flavor from lemons is easier than it sounds so this is where I began my investigation.

First I tried the simplest method, combining simple syrup (a mixture of sugar and water) with fresh lemon juice and water. This was an acceptable drink but ordinary and a bit flat tasting. Next, I tried boiling lemon slices in simple syrup and then combining this mixture with lemon juice and water. The result was once again ordinary but also bitter. I also tried using lemon zest instead of slices which was only a small improvement. I then made lemonade using granulated sugar, instead of simple syrup, and found this method the best approach yet but still unremarkable. Finally, I tried boiling lemon halves in water after the juice had been extracted and the result was bitter.

I then turned to Cook's Illustrated which ran a recipe for lemonade back in 1998. After slicing lemons, they are added to a bowl with with sugar and then mashed until the sugar is dissolved and the juice extracted. The mixture is strained and then water is added. This was by far the best lemonade of the bunch with a fresh flavor offset by the rich flavor of lemon oil. As an added bonus, the lemon and sugar flavors were nicely melded together instead of coexisting. The only problem with this method is that it does require a bit more work due to the manual mashing. I enlisted the help of my electric mixer and food processor but if this mixture is even slightly overworked, it quickly turns bitter. The hand method was the winner.

The ratio of sugar to lemons is as important as the method itself. The Cook's article uses 10 to 12 lemons, 1 1/4 cups sugar, and 5 cups water whereas I preferred only 10 lemons — 12 was simply too tart. I also found that a large, deep mixing bowl is best, one that holds about 8 quarts. Although the Cook's recipe suggests a pinch of salt, I preferred the drink without it since the lemonade tasted brighter unsalted. The variation which I liked the most substitutes 6 limes for 3 lemons. I also tried substituting club soda for the water which produced a slightly sweeter but very refreshing drink.

THE BEST LEMONADE

This recipe is best made the day you plan to drink it since it does not maintain its fresh taste even one day later. I suggest combining the two variations below for the best-tasting lemonade.

10 medium lemons, scrubbed well, halved pole to pole and cut into about 1/8th inch slices, the pithy ends discarded
1 1/4 cups sugar
5 cups cold water

Place the lemon slices and sugar into a large mixing bowl or saucepan. Mash with a potato masher until the lemons have given up their juice, the sugar is dissolved, and the juice is thickened to about 2 cups of pulpy syrup, about 4 minutes over a bowl, drain in two batches pressing on the solids to release as much liquid as possible.Discard the solids and transfer the syrup to a serving pitcher. Stir in the water and blend well. Serve immediately over ice. Serves 6-8

LIME VARIATION
Substitute 6 limes for 3 lemons.

SPARKLING VARIATION
Substitute club soda for water in either of the above recipes.

THURSDAY, APRIL 12

Energy and enthusiasm continue to run high today. People are cheerful, talkative. New starts are recommended. The Sagittarius moon interacts with the sun and Uranus, prompting you to be more spontaneous, open-minded. Explore new ideas and set new goals. The moon becomes inactive at 9:56 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. Slow down in this period. Use common sense; don't take risks.

FRIDAY, APRIL 13

Influences continue to rate high for starting new activities, making decisions, getting things done. The moon enters ambitious Capricorn at 8:21 a.m. In addition, alignments of the sun/Uranus and Mercury/Pluto affect the day. Review your priorities and readjust your sights. You can break new ground at home or work.

SATURDAY, APRIL 14

Mercury forms a harmonious contact to Pluto at 7:38 a.m. Take extra quiet time out for yourself this morning. Meditate, reflect, contemplate. You can cut through obstacles and find new meanings in life. The moon travels in Capricorn, promising another productive day. A flowing 120-degree alignment of the sun and Mars adds energy, ambition, excitement.

SUNDAY, APRIL 15

The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 11:31 a.m. This month's new moon culminates in the sign Taurus on April 23. The Capricorn moon generates a quiet, contemplative mood. It forms one major alignment, a harmonious contact to its planetary ruler, Saturn, at 7:00 p.m. Influences turn around completely at 8:11 p.m., when the moon enters social Aquarius and aligns with Venus.

MONDAY, APRIL 16

The moon continues its travel in Aquarius today and tomorrow. In addition, Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius, prepares to align with Mercury. Open your mind to new possibilities. You can achieve breakthroughs and gain important insights. Influences are prime for making long-range plans and setting new goals. The most favorable time for launching important ventures occurs between 2:41-5:41 p.m., when the moon interacts with expansive Jupiter.

TUESDAY, APRIL 17

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Aquarius moon aligns with Pluto, Mercury and Uranus. New is in; old is out. Step out of your usual routine and try something different. Be more spontaneous and willing to experiment with new ideas.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 18

Wake up in a good mood. The Aquarius moon forms a challenging 90-degree contact to Saturn at 8:26 a.m. and becomes inactive. Storm clouds move out, and sunny astrological weather arrives at 9:00 a.m., when the moon enters Pisces. Follow your intuition; your instincts are on target. Mercury forms a flowing 60-degree alignment to inventive Uranus. All communications are highlighted. Sales and promotion campaigns also get the green light.

THURSDAY, APRIL 19

The combination of a Pisces moon and Venus station places the focus on creativity and artistic sensitivity. Do something that brings beauty into your life or the life of another today. The rough spot in the day occurs between 12:56-3:56 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto. Avoid emotional thunderstorms. Keep it light. The big news is that the sun enters earthy Taurus at 8:36 p.m., remaining there until May 20. A harmonious alignment of Mercury to Mars adds an energy boost this evening, making it prime for all social interaction, mental work, communications.

It's time to sow and grow seeds

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Patches of snow still linger in the shadiest corners of my landscape, but in gardens where the warmth of the afternoon sun has softened the frozen earth, emerging bulbs have burst into bloom, announcing the arrival of a new spring season. Drifts of cheerful crocuses create a colorful tapestry in shades of yellow, white, purple and lavender. In a sunny nook alongside my back stairway, clusters of dwarf bulbous irises (Iris reticulata) fill the air with their sweet perfume. Set against a backdrop of dazzling, yellow daffodils, the heavenly, violet-blue blossoms of these miniature irises paint a stunning picture. A new growing season is underway.

Despite my overwhelming desire to work in the garden, most of my property remains cold and soggy. As the majority of my soil tends to be clay-based and on the heavy side, treading on my lawns and gardens will only compact the earth, reducing the availability of air to expanding root systems which could potentially lead to suffocation. Patience must prevail until warmth and dry weather offer more suitable conditions to proceed with my spring cleanup. In the meantime, I will be satisfied with preparing a prioritized list of spring projects as I continue to sow and grow seeds for perennials, annuals and vegetables to fill my gardens with flowers and produce this summer.

Prepare a timetable for starting your seeds once the essential supplies and seed packets have been acquired. Consult the seed packets, catalogs and books for instructions. Do not start seeds earlier than recommended. Perennials tend to grow more slowly and can be started up to 12 week before the last frost. Most annuals and vegetables should wait until six to eight weeks prior to Memorial Day to be sown. Seedlings are best transplanted to their final location before they are budded or flowering. Very little is gained and much can be lost by sowing seeds too early or rushing to transfer seedlings into the ground.

The light-weight, soilless growing mediums are best moistened thoroughly before sowing the seeds, preferably by placing the filled containers in a sink or dishpan of warm water and allowing the water to be drawn up from below. Containers should be filled to approximately 1/2 inch from the top once the medium is moist and gently tamped which may require that additional medium be added. Allow the medium to drain for an hour or two before sowing as it should be moist but not water-logged.

Seedlings are easiest to transplant when sown in rows. Use a pencil or label to press a row into the growing medium. Sow about twice the number of seeds as the number of seedlings desired. Tap seeds from the packet as evenly as possible, leaving ample space between or transfer seeds to a creased piece of paper and gently tap them into rows. Use the tip of a pencil to separate seeds which are too close together. Very fine seeds may have to be broadcast over the medium and gently pressed into the surface or lightly misted. Use the same process for seeds which require light for germination. Cover larger seeds with dry medium 1 to 2 times the thickness of the seed. Moisten with a gentle mist. Be sure to label each container with the date and type of seed planted.

Once the seeds have been sown, place the container into a clear plastic bag and tightly secure. This will prevent the medium from drying out. The bag should not rest on the medium. Use extra labels or Popsicle sticks around the perimeter of the container to raise the plastic off the growing surface. Many seed starting kits come with a clear plastic dome which fits securely over the growing cells. Place the container in good light or under a fluorescent fixture but avoid placing it in direct sunlight unless high temperatures are required for germination. Check regularly and remove the plastic bag as soon as a number of the seeds sprout. Gradually move to stronger light, preferably a south-facing window. Turn your container regularly if you are growing your seedlings in a sunny window for symmetrical, stronger plants. Low light will produce tall, spindly, weak seedlings.

Keep the growing medium evenly moist. Bottom watering is preferred. Start fertilizing with one-quarter strength liquid fertilizer once the first set of true leaves appears (not the original two seed leaves) and gradually increase to half-strength as the plants mature. Thin overcrowded seedlings by snipping or pinching weaker seedlings off at the base once the seedlings have four true leaves. It is usually best to transplant seedlings once before transferring the plants to the garden. Be sure to "harden off" tender seedlings for several days by gradually introducing them to the outdoors after all danger of frost is past. Place seedlings initially into a partly shaded location and then expose them for short periods of sunlight early and late in the day before transplanting them into a sunny location.

There is a tremendous sense of pride and accomplishment when you successfully grow plants from seed. Discover the magic of watching a tiny seed germinate and grow to produce a clump of exquisite flowers or a vine covered with delicious, plump tomatoes at a fraction of the cost of buying flats or individual plants.

Town resident looks heavenly for photos

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It was a June afternoon, and Lee Cisneros was taking a break from doing some yard work at his King Street home.

"I looked up [at the sky] and there was this image," he recalled. "I yelled to my wife to get my camera, and I started taking some pictures...I was stunned."

The photos — four of them — are of two cloud banks, lined up horizontally and vertically so that one might think the horizontal cloud looks like someone's outstretched arms, and the vertical clouds, like a torso and legs.

Exactly what he took pictures of that summer day, he is leaving up to viewers of the photos. But most have come to the same conclusion. "Some explain it looks like Christ on a cross or something," he said. "Others wonder what it is for a while, but eventually come to the same conclusion."

Cisneros, a photographer by hobby, and a consultant in the distribution/transportation industry by trade, said his celestial images, which have been shown mostly to family members, usually receive an "interesting response."

He said, "My feeling is that everyone has to look at it on their own. Perception is in the eyes of the beholder I guess."

One of the people outside of his family that has seen the pictures is the Rev. Gary Ritts of Second Congregational Church.

"It was such an astonishing experience to hear Lee's story around this picture... It's just so amazing that we all have, inside us the innate ability to see miracles and messages in the natural world all around," Ritts said. "It's simply that Easter Spirit that lives beyond what our five basic senses tell us, into deeper and more profound realities."

Cisneros said although he attends church regularly, he doesn't consider himself an "overt, zealous religion nut," and doesn't call his photo a religious miracle.

"Whatever reaction a person has, whether it has a religious connotation, that's OK, or if it has just an unusual connotation, that's OK too as far as I'm concerned," Cisneros said. "I wouldn't call it a mystery, but it is very, very unusual."

Deer Hill School librarian Marjorie Murphy has also seen the photo and calls its "impressive."

"When I first saw it, and I wouldn't say it to [my students] but I saw a picture of crucifix," she said. "I was quite impressed...very impressed."

Murphy said she plans on using the photo in a cloud formation session when Deer Hill students return from next week's spring break. "They did a study of the weather in fifth grade and about cloud formations, so I want to get their impressions," she said. "The children will be very impressed that an adult did something like this, and appreciated nature and the formations of clouds."

Cisneros, a Cohasset resident since 1984, has a number of Cohasset landscape photos spread around Town Hall and town schools, and said he has come limited copies of the cloud formation available for people interested. His telephone number is 781-383-1604.

HOLY WEEK

St. Stephen's Church events

A 24 hour Prayer Watch begins on Maundy Thursday, April 12, at 3 p.m. at St. Stephen's Church. Worshipers sign up for an hour throughout the day to be in church to read, pray, just to be quiet, or meditate. This time at prayer recalls Jesus' words at Gethsemane, "So, could you not watch with me one hour?" and the words of Psalm 130: "my soul waits for the Lord more than those who watch for the morning, more than those who watch for the morning." At 7:30 p.m. on Maundy Thursday the Holy Eucharist will be celebrated commemorating the Last Supper. Following the Eucharist worshipers will gather for a simple meal of foods typical of Jesus' place and time - breads, cheese, olives, nuts, fruits, and milk and honey. This shared meal accents the importance of community and fellowship for the church's life together in Christ.

Good Friday worship begins at noon on April 13, with an hour of quiet. The Service of the Word and Solemn Collects begins at 1 p.m. A special service for children takes place at 2:30 p.m. and ends the traditional three hours of worship while Jesus was on the cross.

Children will gather the next day on Saturday, April 14 at 2:30 p.m. in the church courtyard for an Easter egg hunt, a playful way to enter into the joy of Christ's resurrection. The Great Vigil of Easter candlelight worship will begin Saturday at 7:30 p.m. The worship is dramatic beginning with the church in darkness. Candles are lit and at the moment when the resurrection is proclaimed the church is ablaze with light signifying that the resurrected Jesus is the light that leads the world out of darkness.

Easter morning, Sunday, April 15, the story is told of the women coming to the tomb where Jesus' body had been placed and finding it empty. The worship begins with the words "Christ is risen." Services are at 8 and 10 a.m. Music for 8 a.m. worship will be organ and brass with a vocal quartet. At 10 a.m. there will be full choir with organ and brass. Both services will be a celebration of Holy Eucharist with sermon.

Fallen lightkeepers remembered

STAFF PHOTOS BY ALAN CHAPMAN

Above left, Minot Ledge Lighthouse rises out of the water as the sun sets Monday. The Scituate Historical Society hosted a cruise to the lighthouse to mark the 150th anniversary of the Minot Gale of April 16, 1851. Assistant lightkeepers, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine of Cohasset, perished in the storm that also claimed the first Minot light. Some of their descendents, including Cohasset's Herb Jason (top photo), were aboard for the three-hour voyage this week to pay tribute to the men with a wreath-laying ceremony. Above, the Boston skyline provides the perfect backdrop for Minot light on the spring evening.

ZBA to review comprehensive permit process

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's a term that can strike fear into the hearts of town officials and preservationists.

Mention the term "comprehensive permit" around a town and watch as people recoil in terror.

The off-shoot of the 1969 "Anti-Snob Zoning Act" could be coming to an undeveloped parcel near you.

With a comprehensive permit, and a promise to make 25 percent of the units "affordable," a developer is able to sidestep the normal permitting process.

"I think it's inevitable we're going to get one or two or three filed in the next 12 to 18 months."
—Woody Chittick, ZBA chairman

"It streamlines the process," said Cohasset Zoning Board of Appeals Chairman Woody Chittick. "It's a way to encourage developers to put up mixed income housing in a town without much, and bypass some, but not all, of the local regulations and boards."

A strong housing market that allows developers to still make a sizeable profit off comprehensive permits, though only able to sell 75

Strengthening seatbelt law before legislature

Local police back tougher bill

By Seth Jacobson and Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Some local legislators believe primary enforcement of the seatbelt law in Massachusetts could lead to some bumpy roads if it were to become law because certain civil liberties are at stake.

But local police departments say the trade-off between civil liberties and protection of the public is worth it.

"I'm for any law out there that assists police officers in saving lives."
—Police Chief Brian Noonan

"Something has to be done," says Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan, who estimates less than 50 percent of those stopped for traffic violations or involved in accidents are buckled up. "I'm for any law out there that assists police officers in saving lives."

Seatbelts have been required under state law since 1994. Not buckling up is subject to secondary enforcement, meaning the officer can cite a motorist for not using a seatbelt only if he or she is stopped for something else. The fine for not using a seatbelt is $25. Under existing state law, a police officer can only use primary enforcement to stop a vehicle for a seatbelt infraction if a child, age 12 or under, is not wearing a seatbelt.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who has mixed feelings about the proposal, said beefing up the seatbelt law was briefly debated on the Senate floor last week.

Historical society faces major building upkeep

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Anyone who knows Martha Gjesteby knows she's quick to speak her mind.

During her many years of service as a selectman, school committee and planning board member, and representative on regional boards – Gjesteby hasn't been shy about expressing what she thinks is best for the town.

Therefore, the 300 members of the Cohasset Historical Society are no doubt pleased to have Gjesteby, 72, on their side. So much so that the private group elected her president in November.

"It's a wonderful resource," says the Old Pasture Road resident about the organization founded in 1928. "It's important to preserve the past for the future."

The society owns three historic buildings in town that also serve as

Recount set for Saturday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On Saturday, town election officials will recount by hand the 1,816 votes cast in the annual April 7 Town Election to determine if school committee candidate Adrienne MacCarthy missed a spot on the board by three votes.

In a three-way race for two seats, incumbent school committee member Pat Martin edged out MacCarthy by 960-957 votes. Fellow incumbent Mark DeGiacomo won the other seat with 1,077 votes.

The recount, which will begin at 10 a.m. in the Town Hall auditorium, will be conducted by town poll workers. The town Board of Registrars will decide any questioned ballots.

The public is welcome to attend, but will be restricted from the recount table.

Each candidate can have one representative per election worker at the recount.

The last recount was in a 1984 selectman's race between Mary Jane McArthur and Doris Golden. McArthur eventually won after a run-off election was called by a judge.

The board of registrars is made up by two Democrats and two Republicans. Democrats are Town Clerk Marion Douglas and Carol St. Pierre. The Republicans are Judith Volungis and Edythe Ford. St. Pierre was appointed by selectmen to replace Margaret Charles who is on vacation this week.

Flushing of water mains continues week of April 23

The Water Department will flushing of all water mains throughout Cohasset will continue through the week of April 23.

"This flushing program, while it may cause some short-term discoloration of water, will improve water quality, taste and odor, for all of our customers," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "The flushing should take only two-to-three weeks to complete."

Residents will be advised that the flushing may cause temporary discoloration of the water, and to avoid doing washes during the flushing.

In the week starting April 23, the following areas will be flushed in this approximate order: (1) Route 3A, King Street – Scituate, Brewster Road area.

"Flushing of an area will begin about 9 p.m. each night. Before flushing of an area takes place," said McNabb, "the residents of the affected area will be notified by a leaflet which will be dropped at their door. Also, a sign will be posted at the area to provide additional notification. Please call the Water Department at 383-0057 if you have any questions."

"Flushing of water mains on a regular basis is necessary to remove accumulated sediment from the water pipes," he said. "However, the town has not been flushed for many years because of the accumulated sediment in the Bear Hill tank, which would have been drawn into the system during flushing. With the new Scituate Hill Water Tank, that problem has been avoided and we can now begin a much needed town-wide flushing program."

Residents will be advised that the flushing may cause temporary discoloration of the water, and to avoid doing washes during the flushing. The discolored water, however, is safe to drink and will not last long. If water becomes discolored, it can be cleared by running an outside faucet until the water runs clear — this will not take long and will not use too much water.

If a wash becomes discolored because of discolored water, residents are advised to pick up a bottle of "Iron Out" for free from the Water Department.

Beechwood Street culvert crumbling

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC..COM

Town officials are scurrying to replace a Beechwood Street culvert that partially collapsed last week, years after it was originally damaged during a water main project.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the culvert, which near the Beechwood Cemetery, was originally damaged in 1996, and had been deteriorating since. However, thanks to one of the wettest springs in recent memory, the deterioration accelerated to the point where a portion of the road has collapsed.

The sinkhole, located on the side of the road, directly over a running body water, currently has a steel plate and orange traffic barrel over it to divert traffic.

The culvert had been on the town's list of things to fix, but the recent crumbling has moved it quickly up to the top.

"It's got to be ripped out and a new one placed in."
— Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield

"It's got to be ripped out and a new one placed in," said Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield. He said the new pre-cast culvert has been ordered and should arrive in the next couple of weeks.

He said the work will take about a week to finish and one lane of traffic will be kept open during the work.

Because the culvert is in a wetland, the town has to file with the Conservation Commission. However, Haddad said Conservation Commission agent Paul Shea gave them the go-ahead to do the work and file for a permit after the work is completed.

Replacing the culvert is expected to cost $17,600. Haddad said he will ask the Advisory Board for permission to take the money out of the town's reserve fund.

As for now, Haddad said the culvert will remain open unless its condition worsens. "We've checked it out and it's not getting worse," he said. "If it gets to the point where we have to do something, we will."

Howe Road man arrested on drug charges

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Working in conjunction with the Norfolk County District Attorney's Drug Task Force, Cohasset police executed a search warrant for 48 Howe Road yesterday morning (Wednesday) that led to drug charges against a Cohasset man.

Police arrested Joseph "Joel" A. Rosano, 54, on charges of possession of marijuana and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute after finding an undetermined quantity of marijuana, related drug paraphernalia, cash and records at Rosano's house.

"It's been a lengthy investigation and right now, we're happy with the conclusion," Police Chief Brian Noonan said.

Cohasset Det. Greg Lennon initiated the investigation, Noonan said.

Rosano was arraigned on the charges late Wednesday afternoon in Quincy District Court. Details were not available as the Mariner went to press.

Police believe that Rosano, a local businessman, has been a supplier of marijuana in the Cohasset area for many years.

Local reps announce lottery aid money

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) and Sen. Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) announced that a $60,000,000 of lottery assistance will be sent to local communities. The two supported this addition to the supplemental budget. The assistance will give $28,414 to Cohasset, $98,590 to Hingham, and $85,159 to Hull. These monies will be used to fund various local projects in to the communities.

"I felt that these additional revenues gained by the lottery should be sent back to our communities. I was pleased to see the amendment added to the supplemental budget, and was glad to help push it through," said Bradley.

"These additional funds are critical to the operational budgets of towns in my district," Hedlund said. "I am very pleased to see that this extra assistance, especially during the budget season that promises to be challenging, will be forthcoming."

Bradley optimistic on cemetery bill

State Rep.Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said this week the home-rule petition allowing Cohasset to pay off the Woodside Cemetery expansion money over 10 years has had no objectors and could be on the floor for debate as early as next week.

The town hopes the state will allow it to repay the $700,000 it borrows to expand the cemetery over 10 years, rather than five years, as is the norm. The town plans to pay back the money from cemetery plot sales.

"The legislation was up before the House Local Affairs Committee April 10, and was reported out favorably," said Bradley. "Since (the home rule petition) doesn't involve any state money, it was sent to the House Steering and Policy Committee, and probably will go out to the House floor next week." He added that so far he has not heard any opposition to the bill.

Once passed in the House, the bill will move on to the Senate for approval.

The expanded cemetery will create an additional 1,800 spaces for town residents. Town Meeting gave the project the thumbs-up last month.

If the bill is defeated for some reason, the extra money needed to pay off the money in five years will have to be made up by the town.

This is being held on Saturday, May 26 and is a great time to come and reminisce at CHS before the school is history as we know it. There will be memorabilia, entertainment for all, yearbooks, tours and refreshments and is a fantastic way for us all to join and celebrate the school and town pride. Tribute at sea

Monday night's sunset cruise hosted by the Scituate Historical Society was perfect for lighthouse lovers.

As Massachusetts Bay Lines' Freedom pulled away from the town pier, those on board were treated to a postcard picture view of Scituate Lighthouse standing tall in the late-day sun.

And while photographers — professional and amateurs alike — were busy snapping away, they were saving some of their film to capture another lighthouse — the Minot Ledge Light.

The three-hour cruise was a remembrance voyage to mark the anniversary of the devastating 1851 Minot Gale, which raged for five days before claiming the first Minot Ledge Lighthouse along with its young keepers, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine.

There could not have been a more fitting way to honor the light keepers.

The seas this April 16 were calm as if in solemn tribute to the men that gave their lives a century and a half ago. As the sun made a hazy descent over the harbor and the city line in the distance, more than 200 on board gazed out windows and over the catamaran's decks toward our lighthouse destination.

Along with society members aboard for the three-hour tour was Cohasset lobsterman Herb Jason, who along with his brother Ken, worked for years to build the Government Island monument dedicated last year to Wilson and Antoine.

Descendents of the keepers made the journey, too. They tossed a flower wreath over board while the quiet prayers of the Rev. Matthew Bradley could be heard over the waves.

Inside the boat, society member and cruise organizer John Galluzzo and American Lighthouse Foundation founder Doug Bingham provided the narrative on the fateful storm and a history of both Minot Ledge lighthouses during the trip.

Never had most aboard been so close to the lighthouse. A cormorant perched atop the tower turned its head toward the boat in disdain as it inched nearer to the tower than most captains would dare to go. As night fell, a Coast Guard cutter joined us on the harbor shooting off flares to illuminate the night sky and the lighthouse before Freedom headed home for Scituate Harbor.

This remembrance voyage was one no one aboard will forget.

Primary enforcement

Here in the newspaper business, we are usually the first to champion civil liberties. But when it comes to primary vs. second enforcement of the seatbelt law we plead no contest.

A bill to beef up the seatbelt law to allow police to stop a motorist for failure to buckle up is winding its way through the Legislature once again. Massachusetts has an abysmal record when it comes to adhering to the seatbelt law. But research shows that primary enforcement — meaning you could be stopped for not buckling up even if you were doing nothing else wrong — would increase seatbelt usage by 15-20 percent right way. That translates directly into fewer severe injuries and saved lives.

We don't seem to complain when we're told to buckle up on an airplane when the chances of injury at traveling at 700 mph at 39,000 feet are statistically far less than what can happen without a seatbelt going 25 mph in a car on terra firma.

It's no surprise our local police support primary enforcement. In little Cohasset, there have already been 69 traffic accidents this year. And estimates are in accidents and traffic stops about 50 percent are wearing seatbelts.

As Hingham's Capt. Taylor Mills points out the cost in dollars can be measured — but the cost in tears cannot.

Let's give police the tool to help educate us that buckling up is serious business. Call state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley and let them know you support primary enforcement.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

My special day

TO THE EDITOR:

Two weeks ago was a very special day for me when the Cohasset Mariner hosted their Cohasset Citizen of The Year day! I was truly overwhelmed by the nominations submitted in my name that made this award possible, and I appreciate all of those who attended the reception at Kimball's By The Sea on April 1st!

It is heart warming to know after a lifetime of living in this community, raising our children, volunteering with my husband, Phil, and serving you as a Selectman and in the Legislature, that you truly care about me in such a special way.

Everyone I have seen since the Mariner reception have asked me where my daughter, Lillian Murray Curley was on that day! Unfortunately, Lillian had to work that day, as Function Manager at the Barker Tavern. I missed her presence very much as did many people attending.

A big thank you to all of you who attended the presentation. I am honored to join the wonderful alumnae of "Citizen of the Year" recipients.

Earth Day, 'Ecotopia' — and Bush!

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

It happens that Earth Day 2001 is occurring when I'm ready to tell you more about "Ecotopia," and the other big news item is Bush's environmental budget, which, with its self-serving thoughtlessness, only feeds the other two subjects.

We know what Earth Day is about, and the book "Ecotopia," which I started to review a while back, is Ernest Callenbach's ecological utopia, so the news that Bush has cut back on all environmental fronts stands out with remarkable regression. The whole point of the March 31 Earth Day conference at Chatham, which I covered in my last column, was a global warming alert, an appeal for us to further develop renewable energy resources as soon as possible, an alert presented so ably by Pulitzer-winning journalist and Union of Concerned Scientists spokesperson, Ross Gelbspan.

It's easy enough to envision the construction of Callenbach's Ecotopia, especially after our last national election: he simply has Washington, Oregon, and northern California secede from the U.S. Industry is de-emphasized here and handcrafts are encouraged; cars are replaced by trains, mini-buses, bicycles, or walking; cities are decompressed into villages; people work only 20 hours a week, enjoyably, due to the lessened need for material goods, and the populace have a chance to really talk, really emote, really relate, because the pace is slower; hospitals are smaller, with more midwives and less emphasis on prolonging life; oil and coal have been phased out and replaced by solar, wind, geothermal and tidal energy; ritual battle replaces war; women have fully come into their own; dare I say, all the sensible improvements you would expect!

I feel it is important to inject, at this point, what eminent environmental journalist Bill McKibben advises: political action and church involvement. Have a thoughtful Earth Day. See you next time.

Cancer survivors walk a lap at the middle-high school track during last year's Relay For Life. This year's event is set for May 18-19.

For Rotarians, the Relay For Life is personal

American Cancer Society event is May 18-19

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Most people either know someone that has cancer or has died from it.

Perhaps that's one of the reasons the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life has become so successful.

Last year, 15 years after it first started with Dr. Gordon Klatt walking around a track in Tacoma, Washington to raise money for cancer research, the event raised $168 million. More than two million people participated in 2,700 events across the country.

Cohasset was one of those town that hosted an event. Over 21 hours, 600 Cohasset participants raised $109,000 for the American Cancer Society.

Peter Pearce is one of those people that knows someone with cancer. His father, who is currently battling prostate cancer, will surely be on his mind when Pearce and the rest of the 21-members of the Cohasset Rotary Club take to the high school track for the Cohasset Relay For Life, May 18-19.

"Most of the Rotarians have some relative or close friend that has been touched by cancer," said Pearce.

For the third year the Cohasset public service group will participate in the walk. Last year the group was among the top money raisers for the Cohasset event, now in its fifth year.

Walkers again can take a step towards finding a cure for cancer from 3 p.m. Friday, May 18 until noon Saturday, May 19. The event starts with a special lap around the track – the Survivors' Lap – featuring cancer survivors or those currently battling the disease.

Event co-organizer Craig Bleicken said he has set a goal of 54 teams and $125,000 for the event. There are already 42 teams committed to the relay with weeks to go before the May 4 registration deadline. He also hopes for a repeat of last year's balmy weather for the event.

This is the third year Bleicken has volunteered to organize the event. He said he normally volunteers for something every year, but the relay has taken on a more significant meaning for him this year.

"Most of the Rotarians have some relative or close friend that has been touched by cancer."
— Peter Pearce, Cohasset Rotary Club

"My main reason this year is a very good friend of mine's one-year old son has contracted cancer. It hits home," said Bleicken whose has a son just a month older than his friend's. "It's something we've got to fight, and do whatever we can do. We all have stories like that. It would be nice to put an end to it with all the technology we have. That's what my main drive this year."

Last year, 70 cancer survivors took part in the Survivors' Lap. This year Bleicken hopes 100 will participate.

Aside from raising money, the group also will sponsor the DJ for the day of the walk-a-thon, as well as participating in the Taste for Life event.

Participating in the event is only natural for Rotarians, said Pearce.

"The main purpose of the event is to raise funds and donate time to worthy causes. There is a history of the Rotary Club being involved in health and humanitarian related causes," he explained. "Internationally, the rotary club is responsible for starting the effort to eradicate polio from the world, and we've raised $300 million towards that goal. The western hemisphere is now polio-free."

But the group also works locally. "We like to act on a local level," Pearce said. "Think globally and act locally."

Now just a few weeks since its annual Road Race By the Sea event in Cohasset, the Rotary Club is now switching their attention to the next event.

Pearce said the group will participate as a whole for the opening ceremony, and Survivors' Lap, and hopefully be able to keep someone on the track for the entire 21-hour event.

"Those wee hours of the morning of tough to fill," Pearce said.

American Cancer Society spokesperson Kate Langstone said anyone is welcome to participate in the Survivors' Lap, even if they don't have a team for the entire event.

People are also able to buy a candle for $5 in memoriam of a loved one that has died of cancer or are currently fighting the disease. The candles will then be lined around the track and lit at 9 p.m.

In 2000, 36,000 people took part in 34 events across Massachusetts, and raised a total of $5 million for the American Cancer Society.

The money is used for research, education, advocacy, and local services for patients and families.

For more information call the American Cancer Society office, 1-888-648-4880.

Relay teams and captains

So far, 12 teams have fully registered for next month's Relay for Life event.

Those teams, and their captains, are:

"Beach Bums," Cindy Whelan and Ed Whelan; "Boo-yah!" Tim Ante and Jenn Buckley; "Cancer Killers," Ross Lieb-Lappen and Ian Kidder; "Clark's Energizers," Ann Marie Goff and Diane O'Brien; "Cohasset Rotary," Peter Pearce; "G-Force V," John Chapman; "Green Roadrunners," Shelly and Jeff Donze, Laura Lee McQuade, and Heidi Salerno; "High Spirits," Jody Doyle and Ann Selig;

"Hingham Middle School," Sandra DeGiaconco; "Hopeful Steps," Sherry Sturino and Kelly Gaumer; "Karen's Team," Bob Clifford and Karen Burns; "Team USA," Molly Brady and Michael Emond.

Because they registered before the early deadline of April 13, the team members names will be put in a drawing for either a one night stay at Kimball's By The Sea plus a $75 gift certificate to Atlantica Restaurant, or a $50 gift certificate to Dependable Cleaners.

The drawing will take place at the closing ceremony on Saturday, May 19.

Also, anyone who has been involved in a past Relay and recruits a new team to the event, will have their name put into a drawing to win one of two prizes: a weekend in Boston with theatre tickets courtesy of Cohasset Travel, or a $200 gift certificate to the South Shore Plaza. Team must have eight members.

RELAY CAPTAINS MEET

The American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset is looking for teams! Come to the next team captain's meeting at 7pm Tuesday, April 24 at Pier 44, 44 Jericho Road in Scituate. Anyone interested in starting a team or learning more about the Relay For Life in Cohasset is welcome to attend.

This year's Relay For Life in Cohasset will take place from 3pm Friday, May 18 through noon on Saturday May 19 at Cohasset High School. Funds raised through the Relay For Life benefit the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, advocacy and patient services. For more information, please contact Bob Clifford at 781-749-4737, Lindsey Blampied at 781-749-4618 or the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880.

The facts on the Relay For Life

What: Relay For Life is the American Cancer Society's version of relay with a new twist. Teams of eight -15 walking and running enthusiasts from local companies, organizations, and neighborhoods raise money to support the fight against cancer. One member of each team should be on the track for the entire overnight event. Others, not on the track can participate in fun activities happening throughout the 18 to 24-hour period.

When: Events take place across Massachusetts during the months of May and June. Now is the time to begin forming and registering your team!

Where: Cohasset: Friday, May 18 through Saturday, May 19, Cohasset High School, 143 Pond St.

Why: An estimated 31,300 Massachusetts residents will develop cancer in the year 2001. Funds raised from this event will support the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education and local services for cancer patients and their families.

How: To register a team, contact the American Cancer Society office at 1-888-648-4880. In addition, local residents can purchase a luminaria (candle) in honor or in memory of someone who has had cancer. These bags light the track for walkers during the night. Or, local cancer survivors are invited to attend a Relay near them and participate in the special Survivor ceremonies. Call the office for more information.

Making your voice heard on runway

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

Hingham and other South Shore voices need to be heard during the current Public Comment Period on Massport's proposal to build a runway that will severely impact the South Shore. Here's how. The following is part of a fact sheet prepared by the Conservation Law Foundation:

What is in the EIS/R and how can I get a copy? The EIS/R consists of two volumes of text and analysis, one volume of technical appendices and eight volumes of responses to comments filed on the first draft of the EIS/R. Copies are available for public review at libraries in Boston and other cities and towns. Massport is also planning to make a CD Rom or electronic version available. For more information or to get a copy of the EIS/R, contact Mr. Flavio Leo, Massport Manger of Aviation Planning and Development at (617) 568-3500 or fleo@Massport.com.

What is the purpose of the public comment period? The public comment period allows individuals and organizations to voice their concerns and opinions to Massport and the FAA, as well as to state and federal environmental agencies. What you think about this project counts. Even if you have previously made comments about the runway, you should express your viewpoint during this important stage in the review process. Comments can address any issues or concern, such as:

- whether the technical analysis in the EIS/R is valid and whether additional analysis or studies are needed;
- whether Massport and the FAA have given enough consideration to alternatives to the proposed runway;
- whether the EIS/R has identified all of the adverse environmental consequences of the proposed runway; and
- whether you think the runway should be built and/or what measures the FAA and Massport should have to take to reduce its environmental impacts if it does get built.

To comply with certain federal and state laws, federal and state officials are specifically seeking public input on:

- the economic, social and environmental effects of the runway and its consistency with local planning; and
- how the proposed runway will affect flight patterns arriving and/or departing from Logan Airport.

How can I participate in the public review process? You can make your comments at a public hearing, submit comments in writing or both. Currently only one joint state-federal public hearing has been scheduled, for April 25 at the Radisson Hotel at 200 Stewart Street in Boston. The hearing is scheduled to start at 3pm and resume at 6pm for an evening session. If you think the timing or location of the hearing does not allow enough time to review and evaluate the EIS/R, you should ask the FAA and Massport to extend the public comment period and/or hold additional public hearings in other locations.

Comments at public meetings are important but they are not substitutes for filing written comments. Written comments are due in early May, with slightly different deadlines for the state and federal processes.

Comments should be sent by May 7 to: John C. Silva; Manager, Environmental Programs; Airports Division, ANE-600; FAA New England Region; 12 New England Executive Park; Burlington, MA 01803

Comments should be sent by May 11 to: Secretary of Environmental Affairs; Attention: MEPA Office; Mr. Arthur Pugsley – EOEA NO. 10458; 251 Causeway St., Boston, MA 02114.

The same comments can be filed with the Federal and State agencies. Don't be intimidated by the process or the size of the document—just state your concerns as clearly and concisely as possible in your own words.

This fact sheet was prepared by the Conservation Law Foundation, 62 Summer Street, Boston, MA 02110-1016 Phone: 617-350-0990 Fax: 617-350-4030 www.clf.org."

Please send copies of your comments to Congressman Delahunt, 1495 Hancock St., Quincy, MA 02169, and to Senator Kennedy, 2400 JFK Federal Building, Boston, MA 02203, and Senator Kerry, 1 Bowdoin Square, 10th Floor, Boston, MA 02114.

Surrounded by Kennedys

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see where a promising young fella by the name of Mark Shriver is planning to run for the U. S. Congress in the Eighth District of Maryland in 2002. I can hardly wait.

Mark, as you may have guessed by now, is the son of the former Eunice Kennedy, who is the granddaughter of a Boston mayor and congressman, the sister of a president and two senators, aunt (it seems) to a good chunk of the Congress, and wife of Sargent Shriver, who once ran for vice president of the United States.

I don't think I've picked up a newspaper in the last 50 or so years without reading of a Kennedy...

He is also the cousin of Kathleen Kennedy Townsend, the lieutenant governor of Maryland, who stands ready to do a Jane Swift in the unlikely event the governor, Parris Glendenning, can be lured away by an appointment as ambassador to Luxembourg or some other critical capital of the Free World.

He is the brother of Maria Shriver, the network newshound, who is married to Arnold Schwarzenegger, who parlayed weight-lifting into a movie career and once gave serious consideration to running for governor of California. He was even mentioned as a possible presidential candidate until someone recalled he was born in Austria. Not even a Kennedy-in-law could beat that rap.

And, of course, Mark is a cousin to Max Kennedy, who is currently house-hunting in the Ninth Congressional District of Massachusetts with an eye to succeeding Joe Moakley in that seat, which is next to the district that was once represented by Joe Kennedy and not far from the First Congressional District of Rhode Island, represented by another Kennedy, his cousin Patrick, son of Senator Ted.

Do you ever get the feeling that you're surrounded by Kennedys; that the next session of Congress will be held in Hyannisport; that if you trace back the ancestry of all 435 members of the House of Representatives, including maybe even Jesse Jackson Jr. of Illinois, far enough, you'll find a Kennedy?

I don't think I've picked up a newspaper in the last 50 or so years without reading of a Kennedy being elected (Jack, Bobby, Ted, et al), in an auto accident (Ted, Joe), charged with rape (William Kennedy Smith) or murder (Michael Skakel), hitting on the baby sitter (Michael), trashing a yacht (Patrick), shoving an airline employee (Patrick again), and getting reelected (Jack, Ted, Joe, et al)

Enough already!

Since no Kennedy has ever lost an election — except for old Honey Fitz, a Kennedy ancestor, in the days of Jim Curley — Mark has a good chance of beating the incumbent, a moderate Republican named Constance Morella, in the Washington suburban district she represents. He's off to a typical Kennedy start.

He's been a member of the Maryland House of Delegates for seven years, working closely with an organization called CHOICE in developing child care and early childhood education.

"Now," says Mark, "those critical investments are under attack in Washington by a Republican administration and congressional leadership that has dropped all pretense of compassion from their conservatism."

Sound like any Kennedy we know?

Housing density subject of ZBA talk Monday at Town Hall

percent of the units built at market price, has resulted in an increase in comprehensive permit applications across the region.

Hingham faces the possibility of more than 600 new units of affordable housing if current proposals go through in the next couple of years.

Although Cohasset hasn't seen a comprehensive permit application in more than a decade, when two were filed between 1988 and 1989, that doesn't mean developers have forgotten about the town.

"The whole comprehensive permit, affordable housing movement has really picked up steam across the state, and I think it's inevitable we're going to get one or two or three filed in the next 12 to 18 months," Chittick said.

As a result, the ZBA is holding a workshop Monday night at 8 p.m. in Town Hall to go over the town's role in comprehensive permit applications. Chittick said a copy of the rules and regulations was sent to every town board – about 50 people in total – and hopes people will be curious and turn out for the meeting.

"Hopefully they will come asking questions. 'How does this work?' 'Do we have a voice?'" he said.. "This is on how the permit application works, what's everyone's role is.

"It's a heads-up for everybody."

There currently aren't any comprehensive permits before the town, but rumors have been flying about the possible use of it at the "Wolf Pit" property in Beechwood, and a possible 200-unit development on top of the granite ledge off Beach Street.

Chittick said the town has limited ability to reject projects being built under the comprehensive permit banner. "The ZBA does have a right to take a look at any and all conditions, and reference its bylaws, but it can't unreasonably withhold approval. It must be some really valid reason such as safety, or hazardous to public health," Chittick said.

He said the density of the development isn't a valid reason. Chittick added that courts tend to sympathize with developers, not towns with less than 3 percent of its housing units affordable, such is the case in Cohasset.

Kent Village, located off the Driftway in Scituate, was built in the early 1980's under a comprehensive permit. Developers fought town objection all the way to the United States Supreme Court.

In order to qualify for affordable housing, a family of four can make as much as $47,800, or 80 percent of the area's median income of $62,700.

Chittick said since Cohasset has no choice but to allow comprehensive housing – at least until the number of affordable housing units reaches 10 percent of all units in town – the best strategy for the town is to work with the developer.

"The process is not to throw up roadblocks, and stonewall, but to guide the project so the town gets the best possible development," he said. The application process calls for comments from the town conservation commission and board of health, and welcomes the thoughts of other town boards.

"The whole process here is to have the best set of conditions that are both reasonable for the developer and reasonable for the town," Chittick said. "They're not going to just shove low-cost affordable housing down the town's throats. There's going to be some mixed income quality character to these developments."

As far as Cohasset goes, Chittick said "there are still developable lots, probably more than people would like to acknowledge." Although Cohasset will probably never face a monstrous 500-unit proposal, such as the one being proposed off Whiting Street in Hingham, he said it still could be a "very lucrative, profitable endeavor" in town.

One of a comprehensive permit's appeal is that the project is eligible for financing from the state. Instead of normal market interest rates, developers are able to build their project, market-price housing units and all, with low-cost financing.

Despite having his hands semi-tied when it comes to dealing with the permits, Chittick sees the use of a comprehensive permit as possibly being good for the town.

"What the town gets out of this is some affordable housing units for people who work in town, to purchase a house, whereas they might not otherwise be able to afford to do so," he said. "I think Cohasset could frankly benefit from a little bit more mixed housing."

Chittick said he can understand where people may have reservations about comprehensive permits, but asked them to read between the lines a bit. "The chances are it's probably more emotional for people, and once they go back and think about it, it may not seem as sinister and big-brotherish as it did at first."

The Chapter 40B rules and regulations review will be held Monday, April 23, at 8 p.m. in the Selectmen's Office at Town Hall.

Thermal imaging camera comes into focus

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset call firefighters took another step toward the purchase of a new thermal imaging camera for the town fire department, thanks to a camera demonstration outside the annual Town Election.

"We had some real nice donations," said Bruce Pratt, president of the Cohasset Firemen's Benefit Association, about the April 7 display. "This will put us around $17,000."

Industrial Protection Services provided a demonstration camera at Town Hall, and hooked it up to a television for passersby to watch.

"They were sort of fascinated," said Pratt.

The display camera showed heat from the Town Hall auditorium escaping through the windows and body heat from people in cars. The cameras can also "see" a person through a room full of black smoke. "They were very intrigued," Pratt said, about those who stopped by.

The association has worked for two and a half years to raise money for the camera, which could cost as much as $35,000. The town was recently awarded a $10,000 state grant that will help. Cohasset Boy Scout Troop 28 will also present a check to the firefighters. The troop is donating the profits it made from running the snack bar at last month's Town Meeting. The check presentation will take place Saturday at 10 a.m. at the fire station on Elm Street.

Kathleen McGuire, a call firefighter, is chairman of the thermal imaging camera fund.

The cameras are already in use in area towns such as Hingham, Hull, Hanover, and Duxbury.

"Most towns either have them or are getting them," Pratt said.

"I want to see enhanced seatbelt use," Hedlund said. "We have the safest roads in the country, but yet we have the highest rate of fatality from lack of seatbelt use. However, I'm not too sure about primary enforcement. That means Big Brother becomes a major part of the issue. I think what would help more people buckle up would be enhanced education on it, especially for kids just learning how to drive."

Using secondary enforcement of the seatbelt law has not made an impact in this state. According to the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau, Massachusetts has dropped to the 49th worst in the nation for seatbelt use.

"We see firsthand how seatbelts work," says Hingham Police Capt. Taylor Mills. "I don't see it as a tool to punish people but to educate – to get the point across."

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, testified in favor of primary enforcement.

"It doesn't make any sense," Bradley says about the current law. "A police officer can stop someone for having a tail light out but not for a seatbelt.

"I talk to a lot of police officers and they suffer severely when they go to a difficult accident and see a lot of harm to people."

Bradley said primary enforcement would increase usage and help prevent more serious injuries. Also, there is significant cost savings in reducing injuries because when the uninsured are in an accident, the taxpayer picks up the tab.

But Sen. Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, who is chairman of the Government Regulations Committee, says education is preferable to adding another traffic violation to the books.

"When you're talking about something like this, you have to be mindful of people's individual rights and freedoms," he said. "Currently, there are already 1,300 different kinds of traffic violations people can be stopped for. Wearing a seatbelt is the law, but I think more aggressive educational programs on the issue would raise the level of awareness."

Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said secondary enforcement of the seatbelt law was the result of a hard-won compromise.

"I'm not supportive of primary enforcement when it comes to seatbelts," said Hynes. "Present law requires a person to buckle up, and when that law was debated in the late 1980s, there was tumultuous opposition to it, but we came to a compromise. That compromise (entailed that) a law would be passed requiring the use of seatbelts but it wouldn't be primarily enforced. It was a good compromise then, and it's a good compromise now."

Police agree that education is important. To that end, Hingham started an initiative of installing signs reminding motorists to buckle up. The signs are going up in school parking lots and other locations around town.

Noonan, the Cohasset chief, says while the seatbelt law is a good tool for police, education is also key.

"The onus shouldn't just be on police but on everybody," he says. "While it's a good tool for police, education on the importance of buckling up needs to start at home."

Hingham's Capt. Mills said the civil liberties argument is the same one used against the motorcycle helmet law.

"The figures are staggering, the number of deaths related to head injuries involving motorcycles," he says. "We all pay to a certain extent for someone else's lack of concern – whether that's through higher insurance rates or the cost in tears."

Mills said 75 percent of the traffic citations issued in Hingham are warnings.

"That really establishes our mission as educators in traffic enforcement," he says.

Hedlund said the Senate gave the bill initial approval, and it has now been sent to the House.

"They will debate it, and if the House approves it, which is unlikely, it will come back to the Senate for final approval," he said.

Under the current law, under secondary enforcement the driver is fined for anyone in the car who is not buckled up and is under 16 years old. Individual violators age 16 and over are fined.

Share your feelings on the seatbelt law with your legislators. Rep. Bradley can be reached at 671-722-2120 and Sen. Hedlund can be reached at 671-722-1646.

Seatbelt statistics

- Massachusetts is 49th out of 50 states in seatbelt usage
- Massachusetts has a 50 percent seatbelt usage rate, the national average is 71 percent
- Studies show, having primary enforcement for seatbelts would increase usage by 15-20 percent
- Increasing the usage rate by 15 percent would prevent 3,000 injuries and save $154 million a year
- The number one drain in the uncompensated hospital care fund that is shared between hospitals and the state is car crashes
- The average cost of an injury when the victim wasn't wearing a seatbelt is $7,000
- The average cost of an injury for a seatbelt user is $1,000

Historical Society is in the nuts and bolts business

museums — the society's headquarters, the Caleb Lothrop House, 14 Summer St.; and the Maritime Museum and John Wilson House on Elm Street in the village that attracted 1,000 visitors last summer.

"It's important to preserve the past for the future."

— Martha Gjesteby, Cohasset Historical Society

What some may not realize, however, is that while the society collects and preserves documents and artifacts, it is also faced with maintaining its buildings. That's a formidable task for a privately funded group.

Replacing roofs, repainting and even major structural repairs — such as replacing the "under-pinnings" to the Wilson house foundation — face the society that is funded through memberships, donations, bequests and some grants. While the society is fiscally solvent, the projects will tax its resources.

"We need $100,000," Gjesteby says about the work that lies ahead. She also points out that maintaining historic treasures, such as the extensive gown collection, genealogical records, and the Helen Howes Vosoff collection of theatrical artifacts, also requires both care and money.

Gjesteby, an active grandmother of eight, can often been seen around town with a stack of manila folders full of the latest society goings-on, which are numerous.

For example, the club is in the throes of planning its April 29 spring dinner and lecture at Kimballs' that features a presentation on the Adams family. Then on four Thursday evenings in May, the society hosts lectures on the following subjects: mossing, Portuguese heritage, the Cohasset Common Historic District and the history of the Beechwood part of town. A yard sale benefit is also slated for May 19 and 20.

"We have a lot of stuff going on," Gjesteby says. But with nearly 20 years of committee work behind her, Gjesteby is proud she can run a meeting with a firm hand and mete out the work needed to be done.

"My husband laughs that I'm good at delegating at home," she says. "I believe in delegating."

But Gjesteby, who interestingly studied physics and chemistry in college, is quick to point out the 16-member board of directors at the society is an enthusiastic, hard-working group that shares her vision of a vital, active organization.

Gjesteby, who laughs at how her grandchildren got her started in researching family genealogy, hopes more citizens will support the society through memberships and donations.

"When I came here 41 years ago, the town had a population of 3,500," she recalls. "It's grown by leaps and bounds. So should the membership of the society.

"Some people get us confused with the historical commission, which is a town board," says Gjesteby, who points out the society gets no money from the town. Individual memberships are $20 annually; junior memberships (for those under 18) are $5 and families are $30. Sustaining memberships are $50. Donations and memberships are tax deductible.

One of Gjesteby's goals is to attract younger people to the society that works with teenagers, who serve as docents at the Wilson house in the summer. Last month's workshop on genealogy attracted Girl Scouts who were working on a badge.

"Anyone can belong," she says. "The society is a repository of a lot of history of the town – there's an awful lot to see in our museums and buildings."

Water commission, Scituate spar over watershed protection legislation

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

An attempt to protect the town's water supply was led to some bad blood between the Cohasset Water Commission and Town of Scituate.

At the heart of the matter is a piece of legislation that would give the water commission the ability to buy or take by eminent domain land in Hingham, Norwell and Scituate, in order to protect the town's water supply.

"Sixty percent of the Lily Pond and Aaron Reservoir watersheds lies outside Cohasset," explained Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "This bill would allow us to buy land outside the town to protect our water supply."

But Scituate is upset that McNabb never told them he was filing the bill.

"I think if one town was filing legislation that affected another town, it would at least have the courtesy to call, and at least tell us its being filed," said selectman Susan Phippen, who wrote a formal letter to McNabb on behalf of Scituate selectmen late last month, complaining about the lack of communication. "We've not been contacted even after the letter was sent. No one has contacted us."

The current bill is similar to one filed last year, with the approval of a Town Meeting vote, that authorized the water commission to obtain land outside of the town's borders. But the new version has amendments. One amendment requires the town Cohasset is taking land from, to sign off on the taking. Another prevents the water commission from taking land that has building permits. The bill was partly in response to the Arrowood development in Scituate, a development that will add more than a dozen new homes near the Lily Pond watershed. However, the new bill focuses on all land within the Lily Pond watershed area, not just that which is in Scituate.

In a letter to the House Committee on Local Affairs Chairman Marie Parente, state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, who represents Scituate, asked the committee to vote against the bill.

"It seems to me that a community should extend the courtesy of a discussion with a neighboring community when they seek land from that community," he said in the March 30 letter. He also said because it was approved at Town Meeting, McNabb shouldn't be allowed to add amendments without Town Meeting approval.

"The proponents should have approached and met with authorities in Scituate, and explained to them the concerns of the matters involved," Hynes added this week.

Hynes and Phippen also argued that Cohasset had plenty of opportunities to comment on the Arrowood development but chose not too until it was too late.

However McNabb contends that Scituate is "over-reacting" and the fact he never told them isn't a big deal.

"I suppose the proper thing would be to tell them we were going to file it...but I don't think I'm under any obligation," he said. "Cohasset is only taking the proper steps needed to protect our resource, so no one should be surprised."

"This bill would allow us to buy land outside the town to protect our water supply."
— John McNabb, Water Commission

However, one of the group's surprised is the Cohasset Board of Selectmen. Town Manager Mark Haddad said in a letter to Parente, as well as other local officials, that "The Cohasset Board of Selectmen and the Cohasset Town Meeting have not had the opportunity to review these proposed amendments and therefore do not recommend adoption at this time."

Haddad added, "The board does not believe that there has not been enough dialogue with the surrounding communities that would be impacted by this proposed legislation."

McNabb disagrees that the legislation needs to go back before Town Meeting, because it affects more than one town, and therefore isn't a home-rule petition.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, the sponsor of the bill, said he has asked for an advisory opinion as to whether the bill does need to go back to Town Meeting for approval.

He also said more communication is needed between the towns involved.

"Simply getting together would clear up a lot of this," he said.

McNabb said the changes he made to the legislation should have removed some of the bitter taste, and was surprised Scituate is still protesting.

"I don't see any validity to their objections at all," he said. "We have an agreement with Scituate going back decades that if they have a temporary problem with their water supply, we'll supply them with water...So I'm perplexed why they won't allow us to take land.

"What is Scituate going to do to help us protect the water supply that we both share to a certain extent?"

Cohasset baseball team sweeps doubleheader over South Shore Tech

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After a season opening loss, the Cohasset baseball Skippers pulled their record above .500 with two wins in a double header over South Shore Voc Tech.

In the opener, senior Tim Grassey hurled a complete game one-hitter, as Cohasset jumped out and stayed on top for the 9-1 win. Grassey also tallied 11 strikeouts in the seven innings, his first start of the year.

Senior captain shortstop TJ Bilodeau pounded out three doubles in three at bats, while junior catcher Tim Straughn went 4-for-4 with a double and a triple.

In the second game, junior starter Matt O'Grodnik was roughed up early, as the host Vikings took a 3-0 first inning lead.

In relief, sophomore Mike Snowdale pitched five very strong innings, as the Cohasset bats lifted the Skippers to an 18-4 victory. Snowdale, making his first appearance as a varsity player, picked up the win in relief.

"I am pleased with Snowdale and Tim Grassey," said Knurek. "[Snowdale's] speed has improved tremendously. I am also pleased with how well prepared they both are to pitch."

It was Straughn leading the offense again in the second tilt, going 3-for-4 with four runs batted in.

"He did exactly what the cleanup hitter is supposed to do," said Knurek, in his fourth year as Cohasset's head coach, of his sweet -swinging catcher.

Senior rightfielder Andrei Skorupa also came up big at the plate, with a 3-for-3, three RBI effort out of the seventh spot in the order.

"I am just pleased our bats came alive," said a smiling Knurek, who did not see very much offense in the season opener in Norton.

Knurek attributes the impressive offensive show to aggressive hitting, something he preaches constantly.

"There is nothing we are horrible at," said Knurek. "But we need to improve our bunting."

Outside of sophomore third baseman Terry Baroudi's sacrifice bunt against Voc Tech, and freshman Mike Dooley's bunt single for his first varsity hit, the Skippers were unable to utilize the bunt for either sacrifices or hits.

In the game against Norton, the Skippers were out-hit 11-5, as the host Lancers prevailing, 7-1. Knurek was quick to point out, though, that some sloppy defensive play did contribute to the

The 25th Annual Cohasset By-The-Sea Road Race was another huge success for local runners as hometown runners shined in the age-group divisions. Beyond Dyan Young's first-place finish in the women's division, locals swept the top three in the boys under-14 division (Tommy Chase, Fletcher Smakel and Devon Bell) took the top two in the 14-17 group (Tom Baird and Ross Lieb-Lappen), 2-3 in the girls 14-17 category (Jenn Buckley and Lindsay Buckley), third in the women's 40-49 division (Linda Simms) and second at 50-59 (Ellen Freida).

C.H.S track team improves to 3-0

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Considered to be the best the school has had to offer in a good number of years, the Cohasset boy's track team has opened its season with three consecutive wins over Norton, Norwell and Hanover.

"We are right where we need to be," said third year coach Al LaFountain, who with 16 athletes is hoping to make a serious run at the South Shore League title. "Our bid for the top three in the state looks even better now."

The only close one of the three meets was Cohasset's seven point victory over Norton. Because the Lancers had over 50 members on their track team, they were all but guaranteed points in every event. Also, Cohasset was missing five of its 16, a severe drop-off when it came to filling events.

"We needed to win first in virtually every event to win," explained LaFountain.

With five points going to a winner, three to second place and one to third, even a win would only net Cohasset one point for the lead, as they were behind by 12 after the running events.

In the field events, Cohasset had everyone on the team competing in the maximum two events per athlete.

Plenty of Skippers saw their first action of the season in events, including four triple jumpers who had never before competed in that event.

"All those guys just said, 'I am just going to try it for the team,'" said LaFountain.

Sandwiched between two laughers over the rebuilding Hanover and Norwell teams, in which Cohasset nearly doubled their opponents scores, Norton really gave Cohasset its only scare of the young season.

"It was a little reality check that we are beatable," offered LaFountain. "It was almost a blessing in disguise."

This proved to be true for all SSL squads, as previously unbeaten Carver lost to Abington earlier this year for its first regular season loss in four years.

"Anyone can go down on any day," asserted the coach, a former decathlete himself.

As for the post-season, Cohasset already has a large portion of its team that has or is very close to qualifying for the State competition.

Senior captain Brian Krupczak, who will most likely move on to All-State's or even the New England's in his events, has qualified in the triple jump, the long jump, the 100 meter and his money event, the 200 meter race.

Junior captain Tim Baird qualified in the mile with a time in the low 4:40's. Needing a 4:50 to qualify, junior Dan Kinchla is close behind, only three seconds off in his last

This weather is for the birds

By Mike Spellman

Rain rain, go away…

Don't think there haven't been a few area high school coaches who haven't called on this ancient childhood incantation. It seems safe to say that a lot of these desperate souls have tried just about everything by this point.

Local baseball, softball, lacrosse, tennis and track teams have been driven repeatedly to gymnasiums and other indoor facilities for practice sessions this spring season. And, nearly three weeks into the various seasons, there have been almost as many postponements in the area as there have been games played.

"This has been as bad a spring as I can ever recall for rain and field damage," said Norwell High Athletic Director Bill Gerety, a coach and teacher for 35 years at the high school last week. "There are a lot of teams around here who were only able to get on their fields for practice two or three times before their season openers."

Gerety deemed his school's softball and baseball fields "unusable" for nearly a week after the two-day deluge in the first week of April, and on the day he finally determined them fit for play, the skies opened up once again. As a result, several scheduled games and matches at Norwell High have been postponed or moved to alternative sites.

The softball team, coached by Gerety, was supposed to open the season on April 3 in Holbrook. That game was postponed, as have two subsequent make-up attempts.

At Silver Lake Regional High School, first-year boys tennis coach Craig Brown was only able to hold four practices (including one in the snow) before the team's April 3rd season opener with Duxbury, a team that had access to an indoor facility. Not surprisingly, the Lakers fell, 4-1.

"This has been as bad a spring as I can ever recall for rain and field damage."
Norwell High Athletic Director and 35 year coach
Bill Gerety

"This really creates an unbalanced situation," said Brown. "We weren't able to prepare the same way as other teams. The boys worked real hard on their games, but our rust was pretty apparent in the early going. And when it comes to double pairings, the need for practice time together is even more important."

Silver Lake girls' golf coach Kathleen Drane only got to practice once with her team in a 10-day span before a recent match with Dennis-Yarmouth, a team that has access to several golf courses with excellent drainage. This situation was the result of the weather and somewhat limited availability of the team's home Halifax Country Club course. The Lady Lakers fell to D-Y, 5-1.

You'll hear similar tales of woe from virtually every coach you talk to nowadays.

And the lost practices and postponed games are only the tip of the proverbial problematic ice berg. With a pre-existing shortfall of game officials — referees, umpires, judges, et al. — scheduling makeup games has been a logistical nightmare for area athletic directors.

"First, we have to find the days when we can get the referees, then the two schools try to figure out what day they can make up their games," Norwell's Gerety said.

And, still, certain concessions must be made. Gerety says that most, if not all, of the remaining junior varsity softball games at Norwell High will be done by just one umpire, rather than the customary two. He figures that's the case with most schools at this point.

"We could really use like two weeks of steady sunshine right now," said Gerety. "But I know better than to expect we're going to see anything close to that."

At least there are a few creatures in these parts who can enjoy the fields around here these days. A couple of Canadian Geese frolic in a puddle near second base at the Marshfield High baseball field, on yet another afternoon last week when practices and games were cancelled.

Tennis courts have also gone unused for much of the spring due to all the rain.

Abington's Wayne Smith. Walden was the runner-up in the 50-59 division of the popular Doyle's 5-mile Road Race in West Roxbury with a time of 37:22 and Smith took fourth in the Thomas Ginta Memorial Road Race's 60-69 group. Smith was clocked in 24:26 over the 5K route.

* * * * * *

The under-14 division of the Cohasset Road Race By-The-Sea 10K simply must be done away with. No 13-year-old runner should be concerning him or herself with running 6.2 miles. Race officials should look to add a 2-1/2 mile or 5K kids race.

Just take a look at the ages of the top-three finishers of the under-14 division, 11, 12 and 10. What are these parents thinking? Their kids have a chance to limp home with a medal? Please. These youngsters should be concentrating on playing several sports. I think it's great that they want to run road races. It's a great sport with huge physical and social benefits. But why 10K races where they risk injury?

There are plenty of shorter races in the area, along with several age-group track meets where they can work on improving their mile times. I've raised this subject in the past and parents have argued with me that their kids are prepared for the 10K because they have "trained" for the distance. Terrific! Nothing like getting a 13-year-old kid acclimated to racing 6.2 miles.

I'm not singling out the Cohasset race, just using it as an example. There are plenty of races that have age groups that are simply too young for the event's distance.

Lest you think this is an off-the-cuff opinion it's not. I ran my first 10K when I was 13 years old and woke with a sore knee the following day that kept me out a month. There was the chance to do well in my age group, and I did, with a third-place finish in the 14-and-under division. Prior to that, the furthest I had ever raced was 2-1/2 miles. It was a distance I would have been much better off sticking with.

attempt.

Junior captain Peter Maitland, one of the best javelin throwers on the South Shore, needed to throw 140 feet to qualify, and his personal best made it at 179 feet.. Maitland also qualified in the high jump, as did junior Liam Martin, clearing six feet in his last meet.

On the verge of qualifying are senior Craig Davis and junior Steve Laney in the discus, sophomore Ian Kidder, who missed qualifying in the 400 by three tenths of a second, and junior Jason Brown in the 100.

The 4x100 relay team has qualified, and the 4x400 is very close right now, despite not using Baird or Maitland.

LaFountain is sure the success of all these athletes is due to the hellish work schedule he inflicts on them.

"Practice isn't fun," LaFountain is quick to point out. "We get a lot of work done, and they are starting to see the reward of that."

Cohasset tri-Captain Tim Baird has already qualified for the post-season State Meet qualified in the mile with times in the low 4:40's. A 4:50 is the minimum requirement.

Cohasset's Valentine ran for a cause

On April 16, Christopher Valentine of Cohasset laced up his running sneakers to participate in the 12th annual Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge (DFM.C). The DFMC team ran in the 105th Boston Marathon.

Valentine, along with runners from 20 states, ran Massachusetts' historic 26.2 miles from Hopkinton to Boston to raise $2.3 million for cancer research.

By raising a minimum of $1,500 each to be a team member, DFMC runners are funding the Claudia Adams Barr Program in Innovative Basic Cancer Research at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. Dana-Farber is a world-renowned leader in cancer research and treatment.

Since the DFMC's inception in 1989, the runners have raised more than $10 million for the Barr Program, which was founded in 1987 by Jacksonville Jaguars owners Wayne and Delores Weaver to honor Mrs. Weaver's mother who lost her battle with cancer 30 years earlier.

In 1990, Dana-Farber was among the first charity organizations to be given official marathon numbers by the Boston Athletic Association (BAA). This year, 15 charities benefit from the BAA's charity program. The Dana-Farber Marathon Challenge features training guidance from Jack Fultz — 1976 Boston Marathon men's champion, team training runs, extensive fund-raising support and volunteer opportunities for non-runners.

topsided final.

"We had five hits," reported the coach, contending that the game was really closer than the final tally indicated. "They just didn't come at the right time."

Bilodeau was tagged with the loss in this one, despite giving up only four earned runs in his complete game effort.

Fortunately, in Tuesday's twin bill with the Vikings, the defense was significantly better.

"Defensively, the best thing I can see is fundamentals" said Knurek. "They are playing good solid baseball."

Overall, Knurek was pleased to come away with two wins in the three consecutive road games.

He is further encouraged by the expected return of junior Nick Bolster, and All-Star caliber shortstop and pitcher.

With a rotation consisting of Bolster, Bilodeau and Grassey, each starter would have a week's rest all season with three games scheduled per week. However, things might change as two games, cancelled due to the recent rain, still have to be made up.

Cohasset boys participate in AAU basketball tournament

Sean Connolly and Ben Lynner of Cohasset participated recently in an AAU basketball tournament held on the north shore of Massachusetts. The Mass AAU team is coached by R. J. Migliaccio and competes in the 16-year-old category of AAU basketball competition. The team played in four games over two days of the weekend in the towns of Gloucester, Middleton, and Ipswich. It was a successful weekend for Mass AAU; they won three of their four of the games.

The one game the team lost was to a 17-year-old team from Long island, NY, and by a mere 7 points. That New York team was last year's bronze medal winner on Long Island and placed sixth in the New York State Tournament. The Mass AAU team of 16-year-olds played an excellent game against this older, talented team.

The 11 boys on Mass AAU are from the eastern Massachusetts towns of Franklin, Cohasset, Wrentham, Norfolk, Milton and East Sandwich, and attend Franklin High School, Milton Academy, Cohasset High School, Bishop Feehan High School, Xaverian Brothers High School and Cape Cod Academy. Playing on this AAU basketball team requires strong dedication that involves two practices per week plus commitment on weekends for tournaments.

The team has several more tournaments to play here in New England, including the Massachusetts State Tournament that will be held over the second and third weekends of May, in southeastern Massachusetts. Mass AAU is also planning to participate in a national tournament in July. With this goal in mind, the boys will be conducting fund raising efforts during the next two months.. Sean (383-1248) and Ben (383-2477) will be selling raffle tickets for a color TV, a VCR and tickets to three Red Sox games. If you would like to support our local basketball players please call them.

Freak accident totals five vehicles

At 3:45 p.m. last Thursday, police responded to an accident in the town parking lot involving five vehicles. Apparently a gray Toyota driven by Richard Strahley, 62, of Hull, entered Parking Way diagonally across from the South Shore Art Center on the wrong side of the road, striking a parked sport utility vehicle and setting off a chain reaction involving four SUVs parked side by side.

Four SUV's were damaged, at right, in an accident last week in the town parking lot.

Police cited Strahley, who was transported to South Shore Hospital, with driving as to endanger, speeding and one-way traffic violation. An off-duty Scituate police officer witnessed the crash. He reported the Toyota was traveling at a high rate of speed southbound on Ripley Road when it entered the intersection of Parking Way on the wrong side of the road. The witness said the Toyota never attempted to slow down as it struck a parked vehicle, which in turn struck another parked vehicle and so on, all in front of the Rudolph Adamo Salon.

Strahley's Toyota struck the parked 1995 Mitsubishi SUV owned by Marianne Smith of Scituate. Smith's SUV was pushed sideways into a 1996 Land Rover owned by Ronald H. Goldenson of Cohasset. Goldenson's SUV then struck the 1989 Isuzu Trooper owned by Kathleen Hansen of Cohasset. Hansen's SUV then struck a 1996 Isuzu, owned by Francis Taylor of Duxbury. None of the SUVs were occupied.

Firefighters assist Richard Strahley who was injured when the Toyota he was driving struck a parked SUV.

Police said the Toyota had heavy front-end damage, and four of the five SUVs suffered heavy driver and passenger side damage. Four of the five vehicles involved were totaled in the accident.

Alcohol was not involved police said. According to the police report, Strahley, who was wearing a seatbelt, said he did not know what had happened when questioned at the scene. Strahley was transferred to Brigham & Women's and was still hospitalized at press time. His condition was not immediately available.

POLICE BRIEFS

Minors arrested

Police charged five teenagers from Hull with being minors in possession of alcohol at about 9:11 p.m., Monday night, at Sandy Beach.

According to the police report, as the officer approached the car in the Sandy Beach parking lot, the operator attempted to back out of the parking space with the trunk wide open. As the cruiser pulled passed the motor vehicle, police observed an open 30-pack of Busch beer in plain view. Further investigation revealed nine cans of beer in the passenger compartment along with a bottle of Courvoisier liqueur.

Charged were Matthew Woodworth, 17, Mark Collins, 18, Robert Scully, 18, Steven Belmarsh, 18 and Timothy Gearty, 18, all of Hull. The teens were arraigned on the charges Tuesday in Quincy District Court.

She's off to see the wizard

Marshfield girl has lead role in Boston Children's Theatre production

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

"The Wizard of Oz" has always been a favorite of Sophie Shrand's.

So when the 12-year-old Marshfield resident got a chance to play Dorothy in a stage production of the classic story, she jumped at the chance.

Shrand has a leading role through April 29 in the Boston Children's Theatre production of the "Wizard of Oz" on stage at the Media Arts Center at Roxbury Community College.

"It's tons of fun," Shrand said of her starring role. "I feel like a good role model for kids, because when they see me on stage, they see me as Dorothy. I met a 3-year-old after one of the shows, and he told me his name. When I said to him, 'My name is Sophie,' he said 'No it's not—it's Dorothy.'"

But Shrand said just being part of the production is a great time, because it is a play which is so familiar and beloved by everyone.

"Everybody knows the show," Shrand said. "But at the same time, all the cast members try to make it a little bit different. That's what makes this show exciting. It's unique." Shrand added there are a couple of moments in the play which do not exist in the famous movie.

Shrand said the Boston Children's Theatre decided to put on "The Wizard of Oz" for two reasons — the theater group needed a spectacular production to celebrate its 50th anniversary and because the book "The Wizard of Oz" was published a century ago this year.

When she auditioned for a role in the show, Shrand had no idea she'd land the lead. But after several call backs the part was hers.

Shrand learned about her big part via an e-mail from her dad, who got word from the show's director Patricia Gleason.

"My Dad sent me an e-greeting," Shrand said. "It was a picture of Dorothy sleeping in poppies. He later told me that (Gleeson) had called him, and told him I'd be playing Toto…on the nights that I wasn't playing Dorothy. I was really excited when I heard that."

Shrand knew she was ready for the challenge of taking on one of the most famous roles in movie history. She had already been in other shows the Boston Children's Theatre had put on. Shrand played Tiny Tim in "A Christmas Carol," Luigi from "Pinocchio," she played an orphan in "Annie," and most recently, she had the lead role of Mary in the theatre's production of "The Secret Garden."

In addition to performing in plays, Shrand is also a member of the Boston Children's Opera, and she has taken part in nine of that company's productions such as "Treasure Island," "Sleeping Beauty," "King Arthur," "Dracula," and "Aunt Betty."

"I just love acting in general," Shrand said. "I've been doing it since I was 3-years-old. I used to use a futon I had as a stage, and I used to put on little shows for my friends. It went on from there."

But talent runs in the family. Shrand said her father was a primary player in the original cast of the children's show called "Zoom."

Shrand said she loves working with The Boston Children's Theatre, and that is why she keeps herself involved with the people there.

"One of the things I love about this group of people is that they're so accepting of everyone," Shrand said.

In her lead role as Dorothy, Sophie Shrand gives the Wicked Witch of the West the old water-in-the-bucket treatment.

Acting is more than just a passing fancy for pre-teen thespian Sophie Shrand. Shrand has starred in several Boston Children's Theatre productions including her most recent role as Dorothy in "The Wizard of Oz."

Although her love of acting runs deep, Shrand is not so sure she wants to make a career out of it.

"Acting will probably always be something I do on the side," she said. "Show business is really iffy. You don't really have the chance to succeed in show business unless you get really lucky."

But no matter what, Shrand said she wants to keep acting as part of her life, because she enjoys doing it. She even had some advice for other actors and actresses her age.

"You have to be persistent," she said. "Don't ever give up when a certain role or a certain audition gives you a tough time. And you can't let yourself be intimidated by tough directors."

Gleeson is a director who really enjoys Shrand's presence on stage.

"She's a great kid, and for a 12-year-old, she's got great acting instincts," Gleeson said. "She works very hard. She's been developing as an actress since she got here two years ago."

When Shrand is not acting, she is working hard in her classes at Furnace Brook Middle School in Marshfield. But she also enjoys drawing, spending time with friends, and playing with animals.

Sophie Shrand

"Acting has actually helped me with school because I've learned a lot about time management," Shrand said.

More than anything, Shrand said acting is a great release for her, a way to express herself.

"I just love being onstage," Shrand said. "I can be whoever I want, and I can act however I want. When I'm in the spotlight, I sometimes forget people are actually watching."

The Boston Children's Theatre production has been running since the beginning of the month, but Shrand said there are still several opportunities to catch her in her ruby slippers. There is an alternate Dorothy who performs some shows. When Shrand isn't playing the Kansas girl, she plays the off stage role of Dorothy's beloved canine companion Toto. Shrand said she will be in her Dorothy role on April 19, 22, and 28.

For more information on the Boston Children's Theatre and the current production of "The Wizard of Oz," call (617) 424-6634 or go to the website at www.bostonchildrenstheatre.org. Tickets for the show are priced from $10-$16.

It is RocketScience

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

RocketScience (sic) is the proverbial melting pot of rock 'n' roll influences, with regular comparisons from fans and the local music press to everything from the classic rock of the Beatles and Led Zeppelin to the alternative-era frontline of Nirvana, Lenny Kravitz, the Foo Fighters, Weezer and Teenage Fanclub.

These days, the South Shore quartet is also the band poised on the brink of a national breakthrough, following two well-praised independent EP discs, an impressive second place showing in the 2000 WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble and local press going as far as to call the band "the undeniable kings of the Boston pop music scene." But unlike countless other bands with similar claims, RocketScience seems more than capable of making good.

The band has arrived at this point simply by taking their work one gig at a time and having as much fun as possible each time out. Two important Boston area club dates this month should be no exceptions — last weekend they played the Sky Bar in Somerville and next Friday (April 20) they'll be at T.T. the Bear's in Cambridge. The latter is part of Boston's annual NEMO event, a three-night citywide music showcase and conference spotlighting 25 clubs and some 250 artists with hundreds of international industry professionals descending upon the city.

"We're hoping to see lots of loving, adoring fans at the NEMO showcase," said RocketScience lead singer, guitarist and sometime keyboardist Andrew Galdins Jr., with an obvious ironic humor. But seriously... "We always take every show as it is, a regular club date where people come out to hear us do as good a show as possible, no matter who's watching. We try to play as well and have as much fun as we can onstage so that everyone, including us, goes away happy."

"Our music is high-energy, adventurous and, I think, unique to us, and we play it in a free-spirited style. This is what we're good at. What we're not good at is the sort of schmoozing and glad handing that's supposed to go with trade show events, because we just never care about that half as much as the music."

The other RocketScientists include guitarist/singer Jon Towne, bassist Aaron Stein and drummer John Barber. Galdins, Towne and Barber all grew up in Weymouth and currently reside in Hingham and Scituate while Stein is from Randolph and now lives in Weymouth.

> "Our music is high-energy, adventurous and, I think, unique to us, and we play it in a free-spirited style. This is what we're good at. > > RocketScience lead singer Andrew Galdins Jr.

Musically, RocketScience's sound lives up to all those comparisons, and the band is especially appreciative of the Beatles comparisons

"We try to take their approach to songwriting and the way they arranged songs and put it into our style," Galdins said.

But one other name that doesn't seem to come up enough in citing influences is that of British New Wave-era power 'popsters' The Jam. One reason perhaps is that band's profoundly "Anglo-centric" sound back in the day made them hugely successful and now legendary back in the U.K., but only vaguely remembered here in the States.

But the members of RocketScience count themselves among the Jam's few but ardent Stateside fans. The British band's influence also reveals itself on RS's two currently available EPs — titled _____ (A Girl's Name Here) and Sandbox —from the very Jam-like polished, hard-hitting and melodically textured guitar sound to the lyrics of bittersweet reflection on love and romance, physical and emotional.

"The Brit-pop influences are also a major part of our sound, not just from the Jam but also Oasis, the Kinks and Radiohead to name a few." said Stein, who also handles with Galdins much of the thoughtful lyric writing. "Andy (Galdins) and I write sometimes from our own experiences, but more often by way of separating ourselves from the song's characters, like from another point of view. It's hard to write about just random things."

Galdins added this insight to the creative process. "I like to approach songwriting from what I call the Kurt Cobain theory, that is, to write one serious line, then one line of complete bull, then another serious line, and so on from there. That way, you never have to hold yourself too accountable for what you write," Galdins said.

In addition to the two local April club dates, RocketScience is spending time in the studio this month at work on its first full-length CD, which the band hopes to have recorded, pressed and ready to tour on nationally by early summer. The band members said it will also likely be their first disc produced entirely by themselves.

Art on the block

Hingham synagogue to hosts auction

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If you think you haven't got a prayer of a chance collecting beautiful art you might want to head to Temple Sha'aray Shalom synagogue next week.

Regency Fine Art Group will be putting all kinds of art on the block April 28 as the Temple hosts its fundraising auction for the first time in 15 years, said temple member and auction organizer Ben Weintraub.

The Georgia based Regency group gets around with its auctions, Weintraub said.

"They basically travel to different organizations and focus on doing art auctions."

Regency provides all the pieces of art to be auctioned off, a majority of which are paintings, Weintraub noted.

"There will be well-known pieces, and unknown pieces," Weintraub said. "Prices will range from the $50 level into the thousands."

In addition to art being auctioned off at the event, local businesses have donated various "goods and services" to be put up on the auction block.

Weintraub said an "auction preview" will take place at the temple at 6:30 p.m. before the actual auction gets underway at 7:30 p.m..

Weintraub said based on the success of past auctions it made sense to bring the event back. . It's something we wanted to do again. We wanted to offer something to all South Shore communities… the auction is open to the public."

The temple benefits by earning a percentage of what the Regency group auctions off and Weintraub said organizers are hoping the event will raise about $6,000 which he said "goes straight to the temple's bottom line." Weintraub said the temple depends on donations and other sorts of fundraisers to put on programs and to support membership at the temple.

"We usually have two or three fundraisers like this a year," Weintraub said, noting that this year's "Barn Sale" is coming up Memorial Day.

But the auction should prove to be a lively night. Weintraub there will be hors'doerves and desserts served, and there will be "a cash wine and beer bar."

For those who don't take home art the night before there will be "next day sale" after the auction from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m. April 29.

"It should be a really good time," Weintraub said. "We hope a lot of people decide to take part in it."

For more information on the auction, call Congregation Sha'aray Shalom at (781) 749-8103.

Ricotta cheesecake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

For some cookbook authors, ricotta cheesecake is nothing more than a New York style cheesecake with the addition of ricotta along with a few standard flavorings such as pine nuts, orange zest, and rum-soaked raisins. In my opinion, however, a really good ricotta cheesecake allows the unique texture of the ricotta to shine through by not drowning it in a cream-laden, custardy bath.

I started with a few guidelines. I wanted to use an 8-inch spring form pan (some recipes use odd sizes such as 6-inch pans) and I wanted to keep the recipe as simple as possible. I made four recipes to start, one each from Lidia Bastianich, Nick Malgieri, Carol Field, and one from the "New Joy of Cooking." The differences were remarkable. Carl Field uses heavy cream and sour cream in addition to the ricotta, Joy uses almost double the sugar plus chocolate chips, and there was no consensus about the number of eggs and whether or not the whites should be beaten separately.

The first issue to resolve was that of the eggs. Using 1 1/2 pounds of ricotta, I found that 5 eggs produced a custardy cake, 3 eggs produced something akin to a cannoli filling, but 4 eggs was just right. I tried separating them and whipping the whites but the resulting texture was on the dry side. However, when I separated only two of the eggs, I found the texture preferable. It was slightly drier and less "wet," an unpleasant feature of many ricotta cheesecakes.

Next, I tried adding 1/4 pound cream cheese to the mixture and I found that the cake was pleasantly creamy. (The cream cheese has to be beaten with the sugar, not just added to the egg mixture, to properly blend it with the batter.) However, the addition of sour cream was unwelcome due to the added tang and both sour cream and heavy cream resulted in a texture which was too wet.

I then sorted through all of the flavoring ingredients. Chocolate chips were revolting, cinnamon was equally odd and overpowering, and pine nuts and raisins simply complicated the recipe without improving it. Orange zest, lemon zest, dark rum, and vanilla were a nice combination – simple and flavorful.

For baking times, I started with 375 degrees which was a disaster – the center was puffy and cracked. At 350 degrees, the cheesecake was good but a bit on the wet side. I then tried a water bath which took forever and also produced a damp slice of cake. Finally, taking a cue from one of the test recipes, I started the oven at 375 degrees and then finished at 325 degrees. I did find, however, that an extra 10 minutes or so in the oven produced a drier texture which I preferred. For those who are seeking a truly moist, almost wet interior, simply bake this cake 55 to 60 minutes instead of the 65 minutes recommended by the recipe below.

RICOTTA CHEESECAKE

I like a relatively dry ricotta cheesecake and that is why I suggest a relatively long baking time. If you prefer a moister, wetter slice of cheesecake, bake the cake a total of 55 to 60 minutes instead of the 65 minutes suggested below. With the longer baking time, the top of the cake will crack which I do not find objectionable.

4 large eggs at room temperature
4 ounces cream cheese at roor temperature
11 tablespoons sugar
Finely grated zest of one lemon
Finely grated zest of one orange
1 tablespoon dark rum
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
1 1/2 pounds whole milk ricotta

1. Adjust rack to middle position and heat oven to 375 degrees. Butter and flour the bottom and sides of an 8-inch spring form pan. Separate two of the eggs. Beat the cream cheese in the bowl of an electric mixer on medium speed until smooth, about 1 minute. Gradually add 1/2 cup plus 1 tablespoon sugar utes more. Add the two whole eggs and the two yolks one at a time and beat until each is just incorporated, scraping the sides of the pan after each addition to avoid lumps. Add the zest, rum, vanilla and salt and beat until incorporated. Add the ricotta and beat on low until fully mixed into a homogenous batter.

2. Beat the two reserved egg whites on high speed for 15 seconds. Gradually add 2 tablespoons sugar and beat until whites just hold a 2-inch peak. Fold the beaten whites into the mixture.

3. Pour the batter into the prepared pan and bake for 25 minutes. Lower

Planting and growing the regal rhododendrons

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Part I

A momentary flash of brilliant blue swoops across my garden path on a glorious, sunlit Easter day. The bluebirds have returned and hopefully, during the next few weeks, they will take up residence for another season in one of the nesting boxes which line my meadow. Every sighting of these handsome feathered creatures is a memorable event as their heavenly blue, white and rust plumage glows in the afternoon sunlight.

Happiness is spending an entire day working in the garden enjoying the sights, sounds and fragrances of springtime. At long last, a stretch of reasonably moderate, dry weather has allowed the spring clean up to proceed in earnest. Muscles ache from clipping, raking and hauling for hours, but the fatigue is accompanied by a sense of well-being as many of the borders regain their crisp, tidy appearance.

If you purchased or received an Easter lily as a gift, continue to water the container, keeping the soil evenly moist. Remove the anthers that have powdery pollen on them, to extend each flower's bloom period and remove the blossoms as they fade. Apply a dilute, liquid soluble fertilizer every other week.

Once the Easter lily has completed its bloom, it does not have to be discarded. These bulbs will readily adapt to outdoor gardens, but they should be "hardened off" before setting them into the ground. Gradually acclimate the plant by moving it to a location in dappled shade and slowly introduce it to morning and late afternoon sun. If there is a frost in the forecast, bring the pot into an unheated garage or porch for the night. Increase the plant's exposure to sun each day and in a few weeks, the bulb can be transplanted into the garden. Remember to keep watering the pot until the transfer is made. Grow in sun or partial shade in a well-drained soil. Add bulb booster or superphosphate to the planting hole to promote flowers for the following season. It is essential that the lily's stems and leaves be permitted to cure and turn brown before cutting them to the ground, for this is how the plant manufactures food and flowers for the subsequent year.

Be sure to monitor your lilies for lily leaf beetle, a Chinese lacquer red, elongated beetle which feeds on lily foliage. Adult beetles are presently hibernating in the soil, often around clumps of lily bulbs. With air and soil temperatures still relatively cool, these destructive pests can be easily gathered and disposed of before they emerge and begin decimating all parts of the lily as they multiply at an alarming rate. The application of a grub control containing Merit around lily bulbs, which will be absorbed by the plant and then ingested by the grotesque larva, has shown some success in reducing the devastating effects of this recent scourge. This pest effects primarily lilies which grow from bulbs, not daylilies which are fibrous-rooted perennials.

The rosy-purple buds of the Korean rhododendron (R. mucronulatum) have started to swell and should burst into bloom later this week. This deciduous, erect member of the Rhododendron family is always the first to bloom in my garden and although the delicate blossoms may be singed by frost before they have completed their display, its early appearance is always a welcome splash of color beside my back walkway. A selected variety of this deciduous shrub, "Cornell Pink," exhibits bright pink blossoms.

The flowering of the Korean rhododendron marks the beginning of a long progression of bloom offered by this diverse family of attractive, showy, flowering shrubs which derive their name from Greek words meaning "rose tree." There are more than 1,000 species and thousands of hybrids of these ornamental plants and by selecting different varieties, colorful blossoms are possible from April through July.

This large family of plants is typically divided into four garden groups, the classic large-leaf rhododendrons (elepidotes), small-leaf rhododendrons (lepidotes), evergreen azaleas and deciduous azaleas. Once considered a separate genus, all azaleas have been classified as members of the Rhododendron genus since the mid-1800's, although the common name of azalea is still most often used by the general public.

A visit to your local nursery will reveal a large selection of tantalizing shrubs. As you browse through the fresh, healthy nursery stock, be sure to consider the ultimate size of your choice, the exposure and soil conditions they require and your willingness to prune those which prefer to grow as "rose trees." Although rhododendrons are magnificent specimen plants, some varieties can quickly overcome the lower windows on one's home until the entire house often becomes engulfed in a sea of rhododendron leaves. Many of the large-leaf varieties are best used as background plants rather than as part of a foundation planting.

Rhododendrons prefer to be sheltered from strong, desiccating winds, and shaded from continuous hot sun in both summer and winter, which makes them ideally suited for a location beneath the high shade of deep-rooted trees and shrubs. Because they are extremely shallow-rooted, they resent competition from other aggressive shallow-rooted trees such as hemlocks, maples and beeches. If given suitable conditions, they are easy, carefree and long-lived shrubs.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, APRIL 19

The combination of a Pisces moon and Venus station places the focus on creativity and artistic sensitivity. Do something that brings beauty into your life or the life of another today. The rough spot in the day occurs between 12:56-3:56 p.m., when the moon aligns with Pluto. Avoid emotional thunderstorms. Keep it light. The big news is that the sun enters earthy Taurus at 8:36 p.m., remaining there until May 20. A harmonious alignment of Mercury to Mars adds an energy boost this evening, making it prime for all social interaction, mental work, communications.

FRIDAY, APRIL 20

This is a day to follow through on projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. Don't take on big work projects or begin important enterprises. At 12:34 a.m. Venus, standing at 1 1/2-degrees of Aries, begins direct travel. The Pisces moon aligns with Mars at 1:40 p.m. and becomes inactive. Saturn moves into Gemini at 5:59 p.m., remaining there until June 2003. Saturn's advice is to consolidate what you have rather than spending what you don't, especially for people born under the sun sign Gemini. A fiery Aries moon arrives at 8:18 p.m., forming easy contacts to Saturn and Venus. Put on your party hat and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21

An Aries moon sets a quick pace this weekend. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action for a few days. Plan to finish projects already begun, clean and reorganize. The planet Mercury moves into Taurus at 4:08 p.m., remaining there until May 6. A lunar contact to Jupiter generates an upbeat mood this evening. Let fun and games to your agenda.

SUNDAY, APRIL 22

Take time out for yourself this morning; to contemplate, meditate, unwind. New starts are off limits. The end of a lunar cycle is a time for looking back, letting go and clearing the way for new activities. Because the sign Aries is ruled by the action planet Mars, sports and physical exercise are a good way to let off steam today. The Aries moon continues active travel until 11:34 p.m., when it aligns with Mars.

MONDAY, APRIL 23

The dark side of the new moon makes for a slow-starting morning. Stay upbeat; don't allow minor setbacks to alter your mood. The moon enters Taurus at 4:56 a.m., and the new moon culminates at 11:26 a.m., 3 1/2-degrees of Taurus. The communication planet Mercury interacts with the sun at 5:25 a.m. and the moon at 12:04 p.m. Chat, surf, network. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this an evening to kick back and mellow out completely.

TUESDAY, APRIL 24

The light side of a new moon is generally a prime time for initiating new projects. However, a 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Neptune affects today and tomorrow. Its influence makes it difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. This is not a favorable time for signing contracts or making important decisions. Romance is in the air this evening. Plan a candlelight dinner for two.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 25

This is a great day for vacationing. The Taurus moon becomes inactive at 1:08 a.m. until 11:11 a.m., when a Gemini moon takes over. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Gemini, forms a 90-degree contact to Neptune at 6:23 p.m. Postpone working on detail-oriented matters, financial decisions, business negotiations. On the other hand, you can make gains developing photography, art, music projects.

BEST BET

NSRWA's Benefit Auction will be held on April 20 at the Cushing Center in Norwell. The Silent auction and preview begins at 5 p.m. and the Live auction begins at 7 p.m. Tickets are $15 each and include a box dinner and program ($10 without dinner) Tables for eight are available for $120. Village task force backs CRC plans

One-way traffic, parking patterns recommended

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Village improvements took a step closer to reality last week when the town Village Revitalization Task Force voted to recommend a number of proposals made by The Cecil Group, consultants hired by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, including a trial period of a one-way traffic pattern down South Main Street and Elm Street.

"We finally kind of nailed down some decisions," said task force chairman Tim O'Brien.

The town-appointed task force is the first level of approval needed for any proposed changes to the village. Once given the green light by the task force, the proposal is then presented before town selectmen, and eventually Town Meeting. The CRC is a private corporation founded to develop plans to improve the village and harbor areas.

The task force voted unanimously to recommend 15 proposals to the town, including a trial period of one-way traffic pattern on Elm Street and South Main Street [see related story]. It also recommended a new parking plan along Depot Court. Cars currently park diagonally along the south side of the court and parallel next to the South Shore Community Center. The new plan would reverse that, so cars would park diagonally next to the community center.

"This was a no-brainer," said O'Brien. "Lots of people liked this, especially with all the kids getting out of cars by the community center." The change could also add an

Selectmen to vote on new traffic plan May 8

By Rick Collins

Selectmen gave initial approval to a one-month trial period for the proposed one-way traffic pattern in Cohasset Village.

The circular pattern would make South Main Street, from the Elm Street intersection, down to Brook Street, one-way going south. Elm Street would become one-way, from Brook Street to South Main Street, heading towards the common.

The pattern is the brainchild of The Cecil Group and BSC Engineering, the engineering consultants, hired by the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation to look at improvements to the downtown area. It initially met with resistance when first presented to selectmen a month ago, and later to residents at a public forum.

The town Village Revitalization Task Force voted last week to recommend a two-week trial period of just a one-way Elm Street, and two-way South Main Street, instead of the entire one-way traffic pattern at once.

But on Tuesday, selectmen, led by Michael Sullivan and Merle Brown, went against the task force's recommendation, and decided to try the complete one-way traffic pattern first.

"I think we should try the whole

Wind gusts push a brush fire toward the beach in Sandy Cove on Sunday afternoon. Firefighters brought the fire under control before it threatened any houses along Atlantic Avenue.

Sandy Cove fire burns one acre

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Firefighters successfully brought a marsh fire off Atlantic Avenue in Sandy Cove under control Sunday afternoon before it threatened any nearby houses.

"It burned about one acre and the wind pushed it all the way," said Fire Chief Roger Lincoln. He said a homeowner, who had a burning permit, was burning lawn brush and leaves when the wind picked up.

Firefighters went in the driveways of numbers 99 and 85 Atlantic Ave. to attack the fire from both sides.

"We were able to surround the fire and stop it before it got to two houses," Lincoln said. A nearby hydrant provided a continuous flow of water.

"The houses weren't in any immediate danger, but had the fire continued to burn, they would have been," he said.

The fire took off right in front of Peter Dewey's house at 91 Atlantic Ave. Dewey said a lot of people in the vicinity were home on the warm spring afternoon.

"The wind picked up and the fire took off quickly," he said. "The spark got into the front field of dried sea grass – luckily the wind was blowing toward the water.

"In about 10 minutes it was at the end of the beach."

Michael Scery, 95 Atlantic Ave., said burning brush this time of year is a common occurrence. Although a neighbor obtained the permit and was doing the burning, it very easily could have been him, Sceery said.

"The houses weren't in any immediate danger, but had the fire continued to burn, they would have been."
— Fire Chief Roger Lincoln

"We get a lot of debris that washes up with storms in the winter," he said.

Sceery said he left for the dump at 1:30 p.m. and when he got back at 2 p.m., "there was all kinds of excitement here." He praised the firefighters for being both quick and thorough.

"The fire department was so diligent they spent three hours hosing the field down. They were also nice and cordial and didn't scold anyone," he said.

Cohasset responded with two engines and the four-wheel drive squad truck. Because of days off and vacation only four men, including the two EMTs manning the ambulance, were on duty when the 9-1-1 call came in, Lincoln said. "That put the ambulance out of service," he said. Once the fire was under control, the EMTs were released to go to medical calls. Three Cohasset call firefighters and an off-duty firefighter also responded.

The 9-1-1 call came in at 1:37 p.m. and by 5 p.m., firefighters had left the scene and all apparatus was back in service to respond to other calls, Lincoln said.

Durng the Sandy Cove fire, there was a woods fire off Pleasant Street. At that time, Scituate firefighters were helping on Atlantic Avenue and Hull was covering Cohasset headquarters. Hull and Scituate responded to the Pleasant Street fire and Norwell was called to cover headquarters, Lincoln said.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said there is no mandatory minimum manning for the fire department. He explained that six firefighters are assigned to each shift but in a senior department, there are often less than that due to vacations.

"For safety reasons, we never go below four although there is no contractual minimum manning," Haddad said.

Haddad said the town relies on mutual aid.

"Thank God for mutual aid, we've been there for other towns and they've been there

Local woman in the Barbie business

Agency provides thousands of lookalikes

By Lauryn Mittleman
CORRESPONDENT

The call comes in the middle of an already frenetic day: "The Toys R Us retail chain needs 705 models to appear on the same day at every store location nationwide and they all must be Barbie Doll lookalikes."

Yes, you heard right, and while many out there might have thought the call a prank, for Cohasset resident Candy Ford — president of the Ford Management Group modeling agency — it's just another "day in the life." You see, for the past 22 years, Ford has made a career out of fielding all sorts of off-the-wall requests.

Believe it or not, the "call for

Martin is still winner after election recount

Legal objection doesn't halt process

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Pat Martin's narrow victory in a three-way race for two seats on the school committee was upheld in a recount Saturday, but not before her lawyer argued that challenger Adrienne MacCarthy's petition seeking the recount was incomplete.

The recount, which was held after the Board of Registrars decided the petition was filled out sufficiently, gave incumbent Mark DeGiacomo, of Beach Street, 1081 votes, Linden Drive resident Martin 961 votes and Doane Street resident MacCarthy 959 votes. The original count had given a Martin a 960-957 margin of victory over MacCarthy. Seven extra votes were found during the recount. Four of those votes went to DeGiacomo.

"I'm very happy," said Martin, who was unable to attend the recount. She said she could have contested one ballot, but decided against it. "We could have left it open and it could have gone on, and on, and on. But it's over. It's time to get onto the important stuff."

"I would've loved to have won but to come this close is just as sweet."
— Adrienne MacCarthy, Doane Street

MacCarthy said despite the razor-thin loss, she wasn't at all disappointed in the outcome. "I was happy to pick up one more vote. I still feel very happy with the outcome of our campaign, Our message got out there and 50 percent of the people agreed with it and agreed with me," she said. "For the

"There is little opportunity to delay or drag our feet," he told the board and the dozen people in attendance. "We need to clarify our rules."

Chittick argued that the town's best strategy was to cooperate with a developer, in order to get a deal that protects the town, and still makes the project economically feasible. Only the town conservation commission and board of health are able to file comments on the project, though other boards can comment informally.

Committee member Benjamin Lacey urged other boards in town, such as the planning board and growth and development committee to start discussing the process.

Merle Brown, on the urging of the ZBA, asked selectmen Tuesday to establish a town housing partnership to deal with the town's lack of affordable housing. Although the number is not known for certain, ZBA member Lisa Dick estimated only 2.8 percent of all housing units in Cohasset would be classified as "affordable housing."

In order for a town to deny a comprehensive permit, it has to have at least 10 percent of its units affordable, and even then the town has to entertain the applications. But Chittick said but the state housing board is more willing to side with the town, rather than the developer, in those situations.

Town rules require a letter from the state saying the project will be funded, before it will hold a hearing on a comprehensive permit. It also calls for the developer to list all of the zoning codes it is seeking relief from. Chittick said this isn't to be used as a "gotcha," but instead for the board to know exactly what will take place. The town also calls for engineer and architect approved preliminary plans during the hearing.

Comprehensive permit hearings also require the use of a stenographer, to be provided by the applicant.

The zoning board debated whether it could require a full site plan for the application process. The board argued that it would help them understand the full scope and all the details of the project. However, town counsel Richard Hucksam said that requirement could be considered as the board overstepping its regulatory bounds, and would check its legality.

Unfortunately for residents trying to launch their boats, the property will be closed from Monday to Friday during the course of the work. The parking lot will be open for trailers to turn around in on the weekends, but at their meeting Tuesday, selectmen asked residents to try and launch their boats prior to the June 1 starting date.

The starting date itself was of some controversy among selectmen. The original projected starting date was in May, but RAD Corp., had to push the date back.

That didn't sit well with Selectman Michael Sullivan. He said the town should insist it starts the work in May, as was written in the project bid, instead of in the middle of boating season.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the construction company had done the town a favor by holding onto the bid price for 60 days, while the town went to Town Meeting for more money, and should be allowed to start on June 1. But on Sullivan's insistence, Haddad said he'd ask RAD Corp., to try and move-up the starting date.

The town bought the property from Mary Hagerty in 1993. It has taken seven years to complete the permitting process.

Beach St. residents fret about future of ledge

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though sitting somewhat unnoticed off Beach Street, an eons-old granite cliff has been ground zero in a seven-year battle between developers, and the town conservation commission and local conservationists.

The land used to be part of Great Brewster Woods, but was sold years ago. Now three undeveloped lots, and one house sit atop the cliff, overlooking Little Harbor and Beach Street houses below.

One of the lots, owned by developer Steve Glover, has been the source of increased controversy since he purchased it two years ago and subsequently filed a plan to develop it.

Local residents argue that any further development will exacerbate the current flooding problem on the street. Residents documented the extensive flooding caused by water coming off the shaved ledge, particularly in one resident's yard and also across Beach Street itself, at a January conservation commission hearing where neighbors shared photos of sheets of ice hanging off the cliff.

"The one house built on that site has created some serious drainage problems for one of the residents and to Beach Street. At points during the winter, the entire street freezes over," said Beach Street resident Mark DeGiacomo. "It's caused as a result from blasting of the ledge. We feel if there was any further blasting, it would result in more drainage."

Barbara Power is one of the Beach Street residents affected by the water run-off. "It comes down the ledge and over my property," she said. "My concern is, as they continue to clear and cut down trees, my property is going under water."

But Glover insists his proposal to build a single-family house would actually alleviate some of the flooding issues.

"The runoff would be diverted by the driveway up to the property, into a retention basin, and then under the culvert and into Little Harbor," he said.

Glover said he has been "frustrated" in his attempt to build on Beach Street. "When I purchased the property, the County Registry of Deeds said it was a buildable lot, with an approved septic plan," he explained.

"My concern is, as they continue to clear and cut down trees, my property is going under water."
— Barbara Power, 74 Beach St.

Since the purchase, he has been embroiled in battles with the conservation commission and zoning board of appeals so long that now the septic plan has expired.

But the argument against the plan isn't strictly about flooding issues; it also involves open space preservation.

"I think as residents we've come to appreciate the unique beauty of the ledge and the entire Brewster Woods area," said DeGiacomo. "I feel that the open space, which is basically downtown, should be preserved for all citizens." Brewster Woods, purchased by the Cohasset Conservation Trust in 1985, is located in the wooded area behind Town Hall.

Powers agreed, saying she'd like to see the undeveloped parcels be returned to Brewster Woods. The two other undeveloped parcels are owned by Ellen Morrissey.

Cohasset Conservation Trust President John Hartshorne said the group is aware of the issues surrounding the property. "We're committing ourselves to do what we can to save the land," he said, adding, "but we're in no position to now go out and buy it."

Beach Street resident Lincoln Bloomfield argued in a letter to the conservation commission that the board is able to conserve not only wetlands areas but also "other areas which public necessity requires to be retained for conservation and other passive recreation use. I can think of no more appropriate area meeting that criterion than the remaining undeveloped high hilltop land lying above Beach Street."

However, rumors have circulated around town within the past week that the three lots spread over 13 acres might have been sold to developer David Walsh.

Both Walsh and Glover would only say that there is interest, and talks are ongoing. The Mariner was unable to contact Morrissey.

Beach Street residents are concerned that if Walsh has bought the land, he could file a comprehensive permit and build a large 100-plus unit complex on the site.

Walsh called the rumors about a comprehensive permit "just talk."

Providing there is no sale, Glover is scheduled to meet with the conservation commission about his proposal on May 24.

Water main flushing continues

The Water Department will conclude the flushing of all water mains throughout Cohasset during the week of April 30 to May 4.

In the week starting April 30, the following areas will be flushed in this approximate order: (1) Beach Street & Jerusalem Road (No. Main - Atlantic Ave), (2) Jerusalem Road from Forest Ave to Atlantic Ave, (3) Atlantic Ave, (4) Nichols Road, (5) side streets off Summer Street and Pond Street, (6) Fernway, (7) side streets off Beechwood Street & Brewster Road, (8) White Head Road and Lothrop Lane, (9) side streets off Jerusalem Road, Little Harbor Road, Gammons Road

Residents will be advised that the flushing may cause temporary discoloration of the water, and to avoid doing washes during the flushing. The discolored water, however, is safe to drink and will not last long. If water becomes discolored, it can be cleared by running an outside faucet until the water runs clear - this will not take long and will not use too much water.

If a wash becomes discolored because of discolored water, residents are advised to pick up a free bottle of "Iron Out" from the Water Department. 339 King Street.

All of us here in town know Dick and his wife Sue Straley, owners of Cards & Shards and they have been such a mainstay of our town for the last 25 years. We hope that Dick is up and around soon and gets back to his job working for the Red Cross. If you have a minute to send Dick a card we know that he would love to hear from his many friends. Cards may be sent to Dick Straley, c/o Cards & Shards, 45 S. Main St. We are all thinking about you, get well real soon.

MARATHON RUNNER

I had a great call about a young lady from our town. Priscilla (Cilla) Goff CHS '94', BC '98', daughter of Ed and Jane Goff of Cohasset recently ran and completed her first Boston Marathon in 3 hours, 53 minutes! Cilla ran for the Ron Burton (former Patriot player) Training Village and raised over $2000 for the Summer Camp program which hosts inner city kids each summer. What a great accomplishment for you Cilla and I am sure that each child whose summer you helped to make better are very grateful. Congratulations!

SCOUTS EVENT

The Cohasset Girl Scouts recently held their annual Mother/Daughter Event. This year they had a fun-filled and educational evening which more than 140 couples attended. The theme of the evening was national pride. Each of Cohasset's 15 Girl Scout troops chose a state to represent with interesting facts, costumes and foods. Each state was also represented with a state flag which was very kindly donated by the St. John family business, Eagle Flag. After touring and eating snacks from each troops display, everybody was treated to learning traditional folk dances from many of the different states represented.

Holly Dinsmore of Cohasset is a member of the cast of "Bye Bye Birdie," which premiers May 4 at Cohasset Town Hall.

Marcy Van Cleave taught us some great dances, including everything from the "Boston Tea Party" to the "Hula"! At the end of the evening, every family went home with an "All American Apple Pie" which was partially sponsored by Shaw's Supermarket. Their help with the extremely large order of pies was very much appreciated. An extra special thank you goes to the Joseph Osgood School for allowing the Scouts to use the property for the evening. Also, sincere thanks go out to Atlantica Restaurant, The Red Lion Inn, Bernards, P.J.'s Country House and Chili's Restaurant, for all of their very generous gift certificates which were donated as door prizes. And lastly, a big thank you to all of the Girl Scouts, the leaders and parent volunteers who put many hours of work in to make the evening a huge success!

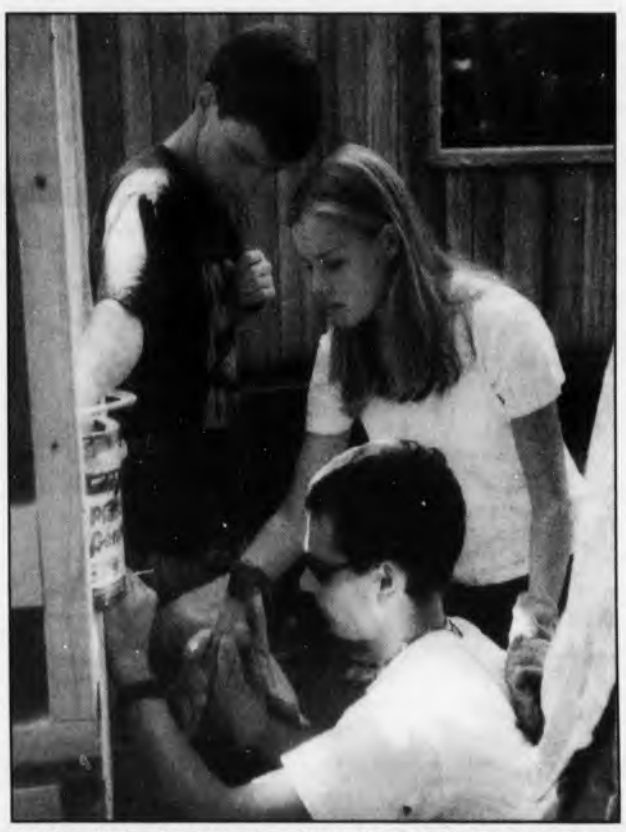
Appalachian Festival is April 28

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project will sponsor its first Appalachian Festival Saturday, April 28, at St. Anthony's Parish Center (corner Summer and So. Main streets, Cohasset). A unique blend of Appalachian traditions will be presented to help awaken more folks to the culture that all of the ASP volunteers have come to appreciate so much.

From 4 to 6 p.m. there will be an Appalachian Mountain Marketplace with authentic Appalachian crafts for sale, a storyteller, ASP slide shows, funnel cakes, hush puppies, fritters and other traditional snack foods.

At 6:30 p.m. there will be a family-style, sit-down dinner featuring Appalachian cuisine (limited seating).



Finally, at 7:30 p.m. there will be entertainment provided by two Appalachian stomp-dance groups, the "Misty Mountain Cloggers" and the "Chair City Cloggers," who will also teach the audience some steps, and a bluegrass band, Dave Foley and the Stand Up Boys.

Tickets, available at local churches, will be as follows, for dinner and performance: adults, $20; teens, $10; children, $5; family maximum, $45; for performance only: adults and teens, $10; children, free; ASP volunteers, $5.

Proceeds to benefit the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project's 14th trip, this year to West Virginia and Virginia with 120 teenage and 55 adult volunteers to do repair and improvement on 25 homes. Cohasset Diversity Day to focus on differences

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

"There is no such thing as an innocent bystander."

This quote is the reason behind the upcoming "Diversity Day 2001; Cohasset is No Place For Hate."

The event, sponsored by the Cohasset Diversity Committee, will be held on April 29, from 2-4 p.m., at St. Anthony's Parish Hall.

The event is designed to help Cohasset residents recognize and respect cultural differences in society, and make Cohasset "no place for hate."

"It may not be happening to us, but it is happening to someone else," said Cohasset Diversity Committee Chairman Susan Etkind. "This is to prepare us to speak up in support of anyone being disenfranchised or discriminated against."

The event's main speaker will be Carole Copeland Thomas, a nation-wide diversity trainer and leadership consultant.

"She's going to talk about awareness and respect for diversity," said Etkind.

Also, storyteller Derek Burrows will spin multicultural tales for school-age children during the main presentation.

The event is supported by the Cohasset Police Department, which will speak on hate crimes, the town churches, Cohasset METCO program, Stop Handgun Violence, and Cohasset Parent School Organization. Etkind also hopes town selectmen will name the day of the event as "Diversity Day" in Cohasset.

She said the committee started six years ago, in response to concern that Cohasset wasn't as welcoming as originally thought. "It started in part because of the growing awareness that there was an issue behind some comments being made in town, and not wanting to wait until it became a huge issues, or a huge incident," Etkind explained. "We wanted to be proactive, and prepare our children and all of us, for living in an increasing diverse society."

The 2000 U.S. Census showed Cohasset's minority population has doubled over the past 10 years, from 0.9 percent to 1.8 percent. Those numbers are expected to climb higher over the next 10 years.

"The event isn't just for school parents or school children, it's for the whole community," Etkind said. "We want to create more awareness that though they may live in a predominately white town, there is diversity, and we want to make sure all people feel welcome."

Allison Moskow, a PSO METCO coordinator, said the diversity program is an opportunity to at people's misperceptions and differences. "People are really quick to judge, when there's a difference, and it's often to validate what choices they're making," she said. "It's OK to judge and find differences, as long as we accept those differences and learn from one another."

The program is free to the community, and all ages are welcome.

Stopping hate crimes starts with awareness

If you are wondering why the small town of Cohasset needs to be concerned about hate crimes because "it doesn't happen here" — you are wrong. The Cohasset Diversity Committee found in collaborating with the Police Department that hate crimes do happen in Cohasset. Of course citizens only know about the ones that are reported. Many people are afraid to report a hate crime particularly if they are a minority and a victim, but many people just do not know what a hate crime is. Sometimes even the perpetrator is unaware that they are committing a crime.

The Diversity Committee, formed in 1995, serves as a resource of information, facilitating education and promoting collaboration within the community. The committee is presently funding a Native American speaker, Hawke Henrie, at the Deer Hill School and is also sponsoring a sixth-grade field trip to a multicultural play. Last spring the METCO Committee and the Diversity Committee sent nine teachers and staff to a METCO Directors' Conference where they attended workshops such as "Kids Can Talk About Race: Facilitating The Conversation." — a workshop for learning to create an anti-racist classroom environment. The Cohasset METCO Committee and the Cohasset PSO joined forces in sponsoring a program with Miriam Jefferson from the National Coalition Building Institute. Twenty-five teachers attended an after-school workshop free to Cohasset faculty, and at the event 25 community members were taught basic bridge-building skills to combat prejudice. As a result of the efforts of the committee, the Cohasset Middle/High School has worked hard to ensure major school or sports events do not conflict with religious holidays of all cultures and religions.

The Diversity Committee is presently funded by the PSO, cookbook sales and community donations. Call Susan Etkind at 383-6602 or Leila Altholtz 383-2263 for more information.

Mutual aid

About 10 years ago in an effort to save costs and provide more efficiency, there was a move afoot to create a seaside fire protection district that would include our area towns. The consultant, who was hired for the study, determined how best to set up the district and where to build the new fire stations. As we recall, the consultant hailed from some faraway land like Oregon where regionalizing is natural and workable.

But anyone who has been in New England longer than five minutes knows how parochial we are. Here on the South Shore — travel from Hingham to Weymouth, for example — and you immediately know which town you're in because each has its own unique character.

Suffice it to say, the expensive regional fire study is somewhere on a shelf gathering dust now.

But interestingly, for as long as we can remember we've had our own regionalized fire/medical service here through mutual aid.

Take Sunday for instance. Cohasset fire responded to an out-of-control brush fire on Atlantic Avenue. Scituate came to help while Hull covered the Cohasset station. Then a woods fire started on Pleasant Street. So Scituate and Hull responded to that fire and Norwell came in to cover the station.

As Town Manager Mark Haddad said, "Thank God for mutual aid. They're there for us and we're there for them."

We don't even want to know the blood pressure reading of an emergency dispatcher when all hell breaks loose. As the old adage says, this is "no way to run a railroad." But like it or not, it's the best system we've got.

We should all be grateful that the patchwork, safety quilt provided by dedicated fire service personnel in our area towns works because chiefs, firefighters and emergency dispatchers make it happen.

HEALTH NOTES

Health risks of lawn pesticides are a concern

By Steve Bobo
FOR THE COHASSET BOARD OF HEALTH

First in a series

With the advent of the growing season, it's time to remind those with lawns and gardens of some of the benefits of good lawn care practices and the risks to which they are exposed from lawn chemicals. This article is one of a series which describes things you can do to protect your health and environment from the real dangers of pollution from our increasingly complicated environmental problems. The articles will begin with a description of some of the real threats from lawn chemicals. Next, we'll deal with natural landscaping and lawn care and describe what you can do to have a yard which provides both a healthy and attractive environment for you, your guests, and your pets. The article will cover do-it-yourself care as well as providing information about natural lawn care and landscaping specialists. We will also give a listing of local specialists which use natural methods. Finally, in another article, we'll talk about some of the health concerns within your home and what you can do about them. This article will also tell what you can do create a healthy home environment, and how to select and advise those who may do your housework.

Pesticides

First, according to the EPA, all pesticides are associated with some risk to human health and the environment.

It is illegal to claim that a pesticide is "safe" even when used as directed.

• Scientific findings link exposure to common lawn care pesticides with an increased risk of several types of cancer, neurological and respiratory diseases and birth defects.

• Lawn care pesticides present special risks for children who spend much of their time playing outdoors. The National Cancer Institute reported that children are at risk for brain and other childhood cancers and six times more likely to develop leukemia when lawn pesticides are used.

Here are some of the risks to you & your children from pesticides.

• In a review- of case-control studies & case report. childhood cancers linked to pesticides include: leukemia, brain cancer, Wilm's tumor, sott-tissue sarcoma, Ewing's sarcoma, non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, &, cancers of the colorectum & testes (Environmental Health Perspectives 106 (Suppl. 3):893—908)

• Non-Hodgkin's Type Lymphoma (the second fastest growing cancer in the U.S.) has repeatedly been associated with use of the weedkiller 2,4-D in studies in the U.S., Canada & Sweden.(Rachel's Environmental Health Weekly #250

• Many lawn care pesticides are classified as endocrine disruptors which can cause irreversible damage to endocrine and reproductive systems in both males and females.

• Organophosphate insecticides (Malathion, Dursban Diazinon, Orthene) act by damaging the nervous system. A 1997 EPA Review of Dursban Poisoning Information revealed 9 published studies documenting 1,432 organophosphate pesticide poisoning victims who still suffered nerve & brain damage one to ten years after exposure.

• Many lawn care pesticides remain toxic long after the "24 hour" re-entry recommendations. Breakdown products (metabolites) of pesticides may be even more toxic than the original active ingredients. "Inerts" (undisclosed ingredients) can also be highly toxic and can comprise up to 97% of the pesticide product.

Here are some risks to our environment from pesticides.

• Pesticide runoff pollutes ground and surface water which threatens the safety of our drinking water supply. In addition, many lawn pesticides are toxic to aquatic and marine organisms.

• Regular pesticide use kills microorganisms in the soil and weakens plants so that they are vulnerable to pest infestation and disease. Pesticides can also sicken or kill non-target organisms, such as beneficial insects, fish, birds, and even family pets.

• Excess fertilizer & pesticides run off into our ponds, streams, rivers, lakes and bays.

• Synthetic pesticides, such as weedkillers, insecticides, rodenticides & fungicides are used to kill living organisms, including many that are beneficial to the soil, such as earthworms.

• Routine or unnecessary spraying can cause organisms to become resistant to pesticides.,

Pesticides and pets

Dogs whose owners used the common weed killer 2, 4-D on their lawns were twice as likely to die of cancer. (J Nat Cancer Inst., Vol. 83: 1 226- 3 I)

Safe alternatives to Pesticides are widely available and effective.

Library Friends

TO THE EDITOR:

The Friends of the Cohasset Library look forward to an exciting year. The year 2000 was a productive year of service to Cohasset starting with our annual fund drive. The results of this drive allowed the Friends to provide numerous goods and services to the library and to continue to sponsor enrichment programs for our patrons.

The Friends of the Paul Pratt Library was founded in 1968 as an organization composed of volunteers who gave many hours of help to the library. The Friends now deliver books to nursing homes and shut-ins, sponsor programs at the library, organize book sales, purchase books and furnishings and the ever-expanding technology.

Since its beginning the Friends has expanded its role in the community and has provided passes to numerous museums including the Children's Museum, the Science Museum, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Kennedy Library, the New England Aquarium, and thanks to a special friend, Lucille McLoughlin, Plimouth Plantation.

Last year the Children's Room was outfitted with a new computer and printer. Support continued for the children of Cohasset with parties in conjunction with the Cohasset Drama Club's children's productions. The summer program, "reading/puzzles" led by Deer Hill librarian, Marge Murphy, as well as several performers for the children from opera to magic continued with Friends' support.

Art exhibits, through the joint efforts of the Friends and the South Shore Art Center, continue to enrich the library on a monthly basis. It is a wonderful opportunity for all to view the artist at leisure and for the young and old to have exposure to a "gallery" setting each month.

The goal of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library remains to support and enhance library services. With the prospect of an exciting new library, we look to new membership and welcome both new and longtime Cohasset residents who would like to become part of the Friends. The library is looking for new volunteers to help with various tasks at the library. If you are interested in a volunteer position at the library please call Linda Wakeman, (781) 383-6641, president of the Friends of the Paul Pratt Library, or Paul Pratt Memorial Library (781) 383-1348.

The trustees of the Scituate Historical Society would like to thank the following Cohasset residents for their participation in the society's Minot's Light Remembrance Cruise of April 16: artist David Alexander for his donation of a painting of Minot's Light for the onboard silent auction; and A.J. Antoine, Herb and Ken Jason, John Small and Rich Silvia, all descendants of Keeper Joseph Antoine, for casting a wreath upon the water in front of the lighthouse in memory of their ancestor lost 150 years ago that night. Thank you all for making the event so memorable.

Where the new Paul Pratt Library stands

By Patience Towle and Sheila Evans
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

At the March, 2000, Town Meeting, a new Cohasset library at the old Joseph Osgood School was given the go-ahead by voters, provided that

- the Library Trustees raise $700,000
- Cohasset receives a Massachusetts Library Construction Grant, and
- the current Paul Pratt Library building is sold when it becomes vacant.

During the past year, much progress has been made. The Cohasset Library Building Fund, Inc. was formed as a 501(c)(3) corporation to enable donors to make gifts to the new library that would be tax deductible to the full extent of the law. Its officers are Patience G. Towle, President, Barbara M. Power, Vice-President, Sheila S. Evans, Secretary, and Sarah R. Pease, Treasurer. They are all Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

An architect's rendering from Burt Hill Kosar Rittelmann Associates of the exterior of the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Next week, every Cohasset household will receive a mailing that asks for a gift to the Cohasset Library Building Fund.

Next a Cohasset Building Fund Committee was formed to solicit personally more than 150 potential donors. The Committee members are Elizabeth B. Baker, S. Woodworth Chittick, Ralph S. Dormitzer, Mark W. Dunne, Bernadette Faulkner, Jane O. Goedecke, June S. Hubbard, William E. Kelley, Beverly J. Koswick, Polly Logan, Roger L. Lowe, Laurens MacLure, Agnes McCann, Monica Y. McKenney, Doris R. McNulty, F. Wisner Murray, Diarmuid O'Connell, Kathleen A. Ofsthun, Sallyann Kakas Quebec, John P. Reardon, Jr., Suzan Redgate, Carol A. Riley, Margaret D. Schroeder, Kathleen L. Sherbrooke, Linda R.Wakeman, and Roger S. Whitley.

The Committee worked very hard through the summer and fall and completed their assignments by the end of 2000. Combined with gifts pledged to the Building Fund before the Committee started its work, more than $800,000 has been pledged to make Cohasset's new library a reality!

The good news is that the more than $800,000 pledged to date is $100,000 more than the Trustees promised to raise. The bad news is that, due to delay by the State in inviting applications for Construction Grants, the project is now estimated to cost $3.3 million, rather than the $2.9 million estimated in the original schedule presented to Town Meeting last year.

Of the $3.3 million now needed for the project, a Massachusetts Library Construction Grant, if awarded on June 7th, will provide $1.5 million, and sale of the current library building will yield an expected $700,000 (its appraised value in 1998). The remainder needed is $1.1 million, of which more than $800,000 has been pledged.

But $300,000 is still needed! Next week, every Cohasset household will receive a mailing that asks for a gift to the Cohasset Library Building Fund. The Library Trustees are confident that more than $300,000 will be raised from this appeal.

The long history of Cohasset's public library has been one of combined public and private support. The generous response to the Building Fund to date indicates great enthusiasm for the wonderful plans for a 15,000 square foot library all on one floor — with ample parking and a community room for public use that will seat up to 60 persons. The names of all persons making gifts of $1,000 or more to the Building Fund will be permanently listed on a Donor Wall in the new library. The names of all donors to the Building Fund will be listed in a final campaign report.

Next week, more details about the new library…

Library trustees Patience Towle and Sheila Evans are also chairman and secretary, respectively, of the Cohasset Library Building Fund.

We're second in sex poll!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Shades of Hester Prynne, the fictional adulteress of old Salem towne!

A survey by the United States Center for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta has designated the old Puritan stronghold of Massachusetts as the second most sexually promiscuous state in the union.

And not a Clinton in sight!

The survey, known as the Behavioral Risk Factor Surveillance System — the name will be changed when it comes out in paperback, I hope — measured the sexually active Bay State adults, ages 18-49, who admitted having two or more sex partners in the past year.

There were 13.6 per cent of them.

If Hester Prynne were alive today, she would simply fade away into the crowd and lose her position as the heroine of the novel by Nathaniel Hawthorne or the movie starring Demi Moore.

"We live in a very sexual city," Larry Kessler, director of Boston's AIDS Action Committee told the Herald. "This is a city with 66 colleges.

I'm not surprised at all. The Puritan ethic died 200 years ago. Boston is a trendy, young city with a huge single base. There's a lot of sexual activity. To pretend otherwise is absurd."

As a matter of fact, I was surprised and a little envious. At my age, I feel a little like a 75-year-old priest would feel when the Pope releases the clergy from their vows of eternal chastity.

If Hester Prynne were alive today, she would simply fade away into the crowd…

The only state to top Massachusetts in promiscuity in the CDC survey was Nevada, the "anything goes" state with 17.6 per cent. Nevada is the state where it is legal for promiscuous wannabes to line up at the box office of the Ride 'Em Cowboy Ranch with Visa or American Express cards clutched in their hot little hands waiting to be introduced to their next partner.

The survey was taken by the Center for Disease Control because they are concerned with the spread of AIDS and other sexually transmitted ailments that can be prevented through the use of condoms.

About 66 per cent of sexually active Massachusetts residents told the CDC surveyors that they used a condom the last time they had sex, which thrilled Jean McGuire, the director of the State Health Department's AIDS Bureau.

"We're pleased about the increasing impact we're having," she said.

That seems to echo the words of those who have given up the good fight against promiscuity — "They're going to do it anyway, so let's teach them the right and safe way to do it."

But all is not lost!

All the respondents in the CDC survey were asked the question: "During the last 12 months, with how many people have you had sexual intercourse?" and 13 per cent of those from Massachusetts refused to answer.

Which leads me to believe that, in spite of their promiscuity, many Bay State residents still hold to the chivalrous ethic:

"A lady is never asked, and a gentleman never tells."

A day for outdoor birds and indoor cats

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

Cats and birds are not usually considered to be compatible playmates. May 12, however, is a day dedicated to celebrating and conserving both.

International Migratory Bird Day is an annual event held the second Saturday in May. IMBD is the creation of Partners in Flight, an organization of cooperative effort between multiple groups, including government agencies at all levels, philanthropic foundations, professional organizations, conservation organizations, industry, the academic community, and private individuals. PIF was founded in 1990 in response to growing concerns regarding declines in populations of landbird species. It focuses on efforts to conserve birds and their habitat, trying not to duplicate work done by other conservation organizations. Species that breed in the Nearctic (North America) and winter in the Neotropics (Central and South America) were the first concern. The focus has since expanded to include most landbirds.

This year the Fish and Wildlife Service, a PIF member, is the sponsor of IMBD. Each year there is a theme related to conservation. This year the theme is shade-grown coffee. Last year it was the recovery of the Peregrine Falcon. I have written about shade-grown coffee in a previous article, but for more information, visit http://americanbirding.org/programs/conssbcof3.htm on the web.

May 12 is also "National Keep Your Cat Indoors Day", an event sponsored by the American Bird Conservancy in conjunction with The Humane Society of the United States and the American Humane Society. Cats were first domesticated around 2000 BC in Egypt where they were worshipped as goddesses. Gradually they were exported around the world, and today are the most favored pets in North America.

Cats are soft and furry. They are cute and cuddly. Cats are also hunters by instinct. Studies show they kill hundreds of millions of birds and small mammals each year, including endangered species. Thus, predation by cats is a significant threat to birds along with habitat destruction, natural disasters, and food shortages.

People can put bells on their cats and keep their cats well fed, but these efforts have been shown to be ineffective.

People can put bells on their cats and keep their cats well fed, but these efforts have been shown to be ineffective. One study by the Mammal Society in England showed that cats wearing bells killed about the same number of birds as did cats not wearing bells, but the bell wearers killed 33 percent more mammals.

Keeping cats indoors is not just about protecting birds. Indoor cats tend to live three to four times as long, on average, as outdoor cats. The hazards of automobiles, predators, disease, poison, and encounters with other cats or dogs are real and dangerous. Unfortunately, too many people abandon their cats after a summer vacation. This practice leads to an increase in the number of stray cats, the offspring of which become feral or wild cats. Spaying and neutering your cats is a good way to help keep down the population of feral cats.

There are at least five IMBD events taking place in Massachusetts on May 12. These will be located at Great Meadows National Wildlife Refuge in Concord, at Federated Church, Davis Hall in Bolton, at the New England Aquarium and the Museum of Science in Boston, and at Autumn Hills Orchard in Groton. To find out more, visit http://birds.fws.gov/imbd/events.html and click on "Search the events registry". Perhaps you can participate in one of these events, or work on solutions for keeping your cat indoors, or just get out and look for spring migrants. This is a time to enjoy and celebrate spring migration with a commitment to trying to insure it will continue.

Hedlund, Bradley willing to give Swift a chance

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Like it or not, Jane Swift is the Governor of Massachusetts.

Despite having "acting" before her title, she wields the constitutional power of the office.

Although her reputation precedes her — including a controversial ride on a State Police helicopter to her Western Massachusetts home and use of staff members to baby-sit her daughter — local legislators are greeting the new governor with an open mind.

"It is important to give her a chance," says freshman state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham. "I know as a resident of this state I want to see my governor succeed. It doesn't do us any good to hope she doesn't."

Despite not seeing eye to eye on many issues, Bradley said he would to give her the "benefit of the doubt." He said part of that willingness stems from the decade she has spent walking the marbled halls of the State House.

"She's been in this building for 10 or 11 years now, she knows her way around," Bradley said.

Swift first came to the State House as an elected official in 1991, when she was 25, and was a freshman senator with a tall, lanky 29-year old Weymouth Republican named Robert Hedlund.

"She was one of the quickest studies in the Republican caucus, if not the entire Senate," Hedlund said. "You could drop a 50-page brief on her desk and she'd be the first to come back with a complete dissertation and top to bottom review and analysis. I have no hesitations about her intelligence."

Hedlund was also encouraged about the possibility of Swift helping the state Republican party out of its recent doldrums. He thought former Gov. William Weld was a "little bit detached" from the legislative caucus, and was disappointed when things got worse under former Gov. Paul Cellucci.

Hedlund said in her first two weeks in office, Swift has already demonstrated a desire to work with her party. He also praised the people she has surrounded herself with, calling it a more "altruistic" group than Cellucci's.

"I know as a resident of this state I want to see my governor succeed. It doesn't do us any good to hope she doesn't."
— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

One of those people is former Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Forman, now Swift's chief of staff.

"He's got a good grasp on the issues affecting the South Shore," Hedlund said.

Neither Hedlund nor Bradley think Swift's ascension will result in any major policy shifts, whether the issue is the state budget or restoration of the Greenbush Line of the Old Colony Railroad.

"She's not going to come out and make a huge policy change," Hedlund said, but did leave the door open for the slight possibility of a change in the status of the train project. He said if current Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan left, and others came into positions of power, there was a "remote possibility" they could send different recommendations to Swift.

Bradley said he considered Swift and Cellucci to be "lockstep" when it came to most issues.

"She can't change the budget [which was filed months ago by Cellucci]," he said "Where she can have an effect is in the veto area when that time comes."

State dems oppose runway

The Massachusetts Democratic Party, at a meeting in West Dennis on April 21, adopted a resolution opposing proposed expansion plans at Logan Airport. The resolution took issue with the rationale behind the expansion, criticized its environmental impacts on nearby communities, and called for more coherent regional transportation planning.

The full text of the resolution reads as follows:

" The Cellucci/Swift Logan Runway Expansion Proposal is bad for the environment, bad for the economy and bad for average citizens who want a safe and dependable flight in and out of Logan Airport. Air travel delay is a serious problem of national proportions. In seven years of Weld/Cellucci/Swift control, Massport has done nothing to solve the air travel delay problem other than turn to this shortsighted and ineffective runway idea. Massachusetts needs creative and courageous leadership that will understand the importance of alternatives such as demand and gate management techniques, to reduce over-scheduling and invest in a truly multi-modal transportation network.

"We, the Massachusetts Democratic Party, resolve to support the efforts of Communities Against Runway Expansion, and all of those who believe that Massport's runway expansion proposal is generationally irresponsible and that it will not resolve air travel delay in the region. We further resolve to oppose the Cellucci/Swift administration's decisions to degrade the quality of life in communities surrounding Logan Airport by building Runway 14/32."

NDA sophomore captains Relay team

Recruits fellow students to join

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

This year will be Martha Henderson's third year participating in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, to be held May 18-19, at Cohasset High School.

And it will be the second time the 16-year-old sophomore at Notre Dame Academy has captained her own team.

Martha first participated in the 21-hour fundraiser in 1999 and enjoyed the event so much, she recruited a bunch of her friends for last year's relay.

"I told them how much fun I had," she said. Last year she sent out emails and along with 11 of her friends, raised $1,400 for the fight against cancer — and had some fun in the process.

"We brought a Frisbee and taught everyone how to play," she said. "We had a site back in the corner of the field, and played soccer and volleyball. We had a lot of athletic people on our team, and we taught everyone how to play."

Martha, a Cohasset resident who attended public schools in town until she went to Notre Dame, also knew a number of other young participants at the event.

"I was the only one from Cohasset on my team, and because I went to public school, I knew a lot of kids our age," she said. "We talked to them and our teams kind of meshed together."

"My friends came up to me afterwards and in September and kept asking if I was doing it. There's a lot of interest."
— Martha Henderson, 16

Martha said she and one of her friends spent five hours walking around the track in the wee hours of the morning, just so her team could keep someone on the track for the entire event.

The fun the team had made its way back to the Hingham private school, which has a strong history of volunteerism, thanks to its campus ministry program.

"They're big into community service and helping out," Martha said. "The principals told me it would be great work, and that it was exactly something they were trying to put it together."

Last year's coverage in the Mariner, which featured Martha and her team walking around the track, was pinned up in the Notre Dame halls. She said her friends have been anxious for a while to get back out on the track.

"My friends came up to me afterwards and in September and kept asking if I was doing it," she said. "There's a lot of interest."

This year Martha expects to have 14 people on her team, and hopes to raise $1,900. She isn't dedicating the relay to anyone in particular, but said she will light a luminaria in memory of her uncle, who passed away from cancer.

The event starts Friday at 3 p.m. with cancer survivors taking a Survivor's Lap around the track. The event ends at noon the following day.

Last year 36,000 people took part in 34 events across Massachusetts, and raised a total of $5 million for the American Cancer Society. Money raised is used for research, education and local services for cancer patients and their families.

Village task force backs CRC plans additional four parking spaces to the area because of the longer curb cut along the community center side.

The task force also recommended:

Σ new sidewalks and crosswalks be constructed along Ripley Road, Depot Court and Pleasant Street, down to the Post Office, as well as a redesign of the intersection outside the town parking lot. "We want to narrow things down and define the curbs a little better," he said.

• The Cecil Group's re-design plan for the town parking lot that would also define the location of the buried train roundhouse under the parking lot.

• the creation of a rolling sidewalk along the north side of Brook Street between Dependable Cleaners and the Hingham Institute for Savings, and installation of a new sidewalk and curb cut in front of Cohasset News.

• three expanded sidewalk areas along the east side of South Main Street for street trees and benches. O'Brien said the trees would probably be located at the corners of South Main and Elm Streets, and South Main and Brook Streets, as well as a tree in front of Shipcove Park.

• a new sidewalk along the base of St. Stephen's Church, while maintaining the current parking layout along South Main Street. Town Meeting originally voted in 1998 to create a sidewalk there and O'Brien said the task force vote "reiterated what should be done."

• a park be designed at Reardon Square, at the end of Brook Street.

• making the crosswalks of a different material than the asphalt road. They suggested stamped asphalt, granite pavers, or another interlocking paving system.

The task force also wants the town to look into expanding the town parking lot on town-owned land next to the Teen Center, adding a sidewalk along the Red Lion Inn side of James Way, and a redesign of the island in front of Kimball's By the Sea.

"It's great to see it's finally getting there."

— Tim O'Brien, task force chairman

It also wants The Cecil Group to look into the possibility of creating a green median strip from the fire/police station down to Kimball's By the Sea. The barrier would have room for trees and plants, as well as curb cuts for Elm Street residents.

Present at the meeting were O'Brien, Joe Coggins, Noel Ripley and Town Planner Liz Harrington.

CRC Executive Director, and former task force chairman, Dean Rizzo was also at the meeting, but not able to vote. "Dean does all the legwork, and it gets decided by all of us," O'Brien said about the difference between Rizzo's and the task force's roles. "Not everyone understands that."

O'Brien said once the Cecil Group knows what the circulation pattern of the village is going to be, it can create a set of final design plans which will be presented and voted on at a future Town Meeting.

But O'Brien said after years of talk, he's happy to see the project move forward. "It's great to see it's finally getting there," he said.

Rizzo is also happy with the progress.

"Its great to see the task force start to make choices and narrow down the options because it is such a large, encompassing process," he said. "As you saw from the votes, they made a lot of decisions which really will make it easier to move forward. It brings more focus to the overall effort, and better defines the objectives and goals in a presentable way to community."

Rizzo is also confident that funding for the improvements will be available. He said a large chunk of work could be paid for through the $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant the town has applied for with MBTA backing.

"That's what these grants are for, for the downtown area," he said. "It's for economic development and downtown improvements."

Also, the town has a $169,000 MassHighway grant for the St. Stephen's sidewalk work, waiting for the town to file plans and claim the grant.

State to visit Cohasset schools

Supt. Edward M. Malvey, of the Cohasset Public Schools recently was informed by the Commissioner of Education of an upcoming department of Education Coordinated Program Review visit. The department's onsite visit will occur during the week of May 7. Such visits are routinely conducted by the department to satisfy federal and state education requirements to review periodically specific education programs and services in local school districts throughout the Commonwealth. The department is conducting the review of several programs during a single visit in order to be more efficient in the time spent on this mandated activity by both department and school system staff, and also to make strong connections with the programs under Education Reform.

Malvey said that the Department's Coordinated Program Review process will address the program areas of Student Support Services/Special Education and include a review of school district program procedures, a study of individual student records, and an onsite visit by a Department of Education Team. The Department Team will conduct interviews of district administrators, teachers and parents, conduct observations of instructional sites and prepare a report for the Superintendent and School Committee.

A written response by the school district. to any identified issues noted in the Department's Coordinated Program Review Final Report will be developed by school officials. The school district may request technical assistance from the State Department of Education in responding to this report. Both the department's report and the school district's response will be available to the public upon request.

Malvey said that he is confident that the Department's Program Review process will be a useful and positive experience for all staff in the district, and that the report will be a useful planning document for continued development of educational services for all students.

Department of Education Program Review procedures provide that any member of the public may request to be interviewed by telephone by a member of the department's visiting team. Persons wishing to be interviewed should call the Student Support Services Office at (781) 383-6104 no later than May 1, to leave their name and phone number, or they may call the Department of Education at (781) 338-3723 to speak with LeRoy Wong. A member of the visiting team will then contact each person desiring an interview within two weeks after the completion of the onsite portion of the review. If an individual does not write or speak English, is not comfortable communicating in English, or requires some other accommodation, the Department will make arrangements to communicate appropriately with the individual.

RECOUNT

Patrick Waters, an attorney, shows observers for candidate Adrienne MacCarthy the proper procedure for making a protest during the school committee election recount on Saturday.

first time out there, I'm very happy. I would've loved to have won but to come this close is just as sweet."

However, she said she was disappointed in Martin's attempt to delay the recount.

"I'm very disappointed, I don't feel that extra step needed to have been taken," MacCarthy said. "I felt it was an unnecessary move."

MacCarthy, who had to obtain the signatures of ten registered voters in each of the town's two precincts, filed her petition requesting a recount on April 12, easily beating the 5 p.m., April 17 deadline. Once the signatures were validated, the Saturday recount date was set.

Martin's lawyer filed their protest with Town Clerk Marion Douglas on Thursday, less than 48 hours before the recount's scheduled starting time.

"It came out of the blue," MacCarthy said. "I didn't anticipate it or expect it."

Martin said since MacCarthy had until Tuesday at 5 p.m. to make any changes to the request, her lawyer didn't receive a copy of it until Wednesday, and notified Douglas the following day. Martin said her lawyer argued it wasn't valid because it lacked the section explaining why MacCarthy was requesting a recount.

"We argued it was not completed, therefore it was not valid," Martin said. "It wasn't a delay, it was just that was how the sequence of events worked out."

MacCarthy was notified of the protest Friday afternoon at 1 p.m., and received a request for a response by Town Counsel at 8 p.m., the night before the recount.

"The Board of Registrars accepted my petition, I worked with them filing it…They felt my paperwork was fine," MacCarthy said. She said she was a little upset to find out at "the 11th hour that lawyers had been called in."

She credited Pat Waters, an Aaron River Road resident and lawyer, with helping her prepare her response in time. "I'm not sure without his counsel and knowledge of the process, and knowledge of doing the right thing, what we'd be discussing right now."

Waters said he argued that a lack of a reason for the recount was not enough to prevent a recount, particularly after the petition had been accepted by the Board of Registrars.

Douglas said the Board of Registrars agreed with MacCarthy, and allowed the recount to go forward. She said the hand recount of the 1,816 ballots cast April 7 took 2-1/2 hours to complete.

MacCarthy said with the outcome of the election now certain, she plans on staying involved in the town PSO. "That's what I'm here to do, it's what I do best," she said. "I take our school system very seriously. I think it's a great system, and I'll help it anyway I can. I won't stop doing that because of a loss."

The next school committee meeting is scheduled for tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Cohasset Middle/High School.

Green light for one-way trial

thing at once," Sullivan said, drawing similar responses from Brown and task force Chairman Timothy O'Brien. "I didn't like it at first, but I went down to the village and walked around, and I think it might work."

The main argument against a one-way South Main Street was that certain businesses that rely on morning commuter traffic, such as French Memories, Tedeschi's and the gas station, would be adversely impacted by the change. However, Sullivan said he doesn't think the change would have that much of an affect.

"It might take some effort to change some habits," he said, "but it doesn't take much too much longer to loop around."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said he had spoken to a village store owner and said the owner had no problem with the change.

Brown said he thinks the current two-way traffic pattern "causes more problems," especially from drivers that illegally cross over to access South Main Street's angled parking.

"I think it would make the whole area safer," said Sullivan.

Selectman Thomas Callahan, one of the more vocal objectors to the one-way pattern when first presented in March, also voted to give initial approval to the trial period.

"I went down to the village and walked around, and I think it might work."

— Selectman Michael Sullivan

He said he goes back and forth on whether or not the change would work. "I have no major problem with it," he said. "My sole concern is the businesses that depend on morning traffic.

Callahan said the only way to find out what the impact will be is to implement the change and see what happens.

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris was not present at the meeting, but Town Manager Mark Haddad said she was comfortable with the trial period, as long as it had the backing of Fire Chief Roger Lincoln.

CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo said both Lincoln and Police Chief Brian Noonan were willing to try the one-way traffic pattern.

The initial go-ahead now means Rizzo has to meet with Lincoln, Noonan, Haddad and Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield to create an implementation plan, and establish how much the trial period will cost the town.

Rizzo gave a ballpark figure of between $3,000 to $4,000. He said the angled parking stripes could be taped over, and replaced by stripes going the other way.

Haddad reminded Rizzo that "there is no money in the budget for this."

Selectmen will vote on final approval for the trial period at their May 8 meeting. They said they will entertain comments from village business owners and residents before the vote.

A year-round venture at Strawberry Parfait

New owners keep popular menu

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Some might say Jim Alibrandi has it all wrong.

He gave up what was essentially a 9-5 job with weekends off — to work all kinds of crazy hours, seven days a week.

But a quick conversation with the Hull resident reveals his is doing what he loves, even if that means slaving over a hot grille for hours on end.

Alibrandi is the new owner of the Strawberry Parfait tucked in at the rear of the town parking lot near the abandoned railroad tracks off Pleasant Street.

"I checked the newspaper every day," he recalls. "I'd been looking for a place like this for a year or longer."

The diner/take-out shop has been a summer landmark for decades. Hungry customers call or come in for not only ice cream but also a range of sandwiches and meals — most of which are not for the weight-watchers among us including fried clam and seafood plates and barbecued dinners. Although fresh fruit cups with yogurt or sherbet on top are lighter offerings.

Alibrandi and his wife, Dottie, who works at Filenes but helps out at the restaurant in her time off, are careful to point out that all the Strawberry Parfait favorites including the ever-popular chicken sandwich the "Clucker", hot spicy buffalo wings and clam chowder are still available.

The couple plans to add "new things" to the menu slowly, but wants the public to know "everything is the same" that was offered under the long-time, prior owner Carmine Carlucci, who bought the store in 1978.

Carlucci says the shop started out selling only ice cream.

"I bought it as an ice cream shop. There were chairs and seats where the kitchen is. There was strawberry wallpaper, a green floor and parfait glasses," he recalled. Carlucci said he put the kitchen in expanded the menu. The building has an interesting history. It served as the coal shed for the railroad and years later Hassan woodcarving was housed there. In fact the fisherman statue outside Kimball's was carved in the building, Carlucci said.

The shop, which opened March 24, won't close at summer's end as it has in years past. The Alibrandis plan to stay open year-round. It didn't take them long to discover they bought a town treasure.

"Even a little kid came in and said, ' you know this is a landmark don't you?'" Dottie says with a smile.

They are impressed with how friendly everyone is. About 50 percent of the business is take-out, ordered over the phone, but on a typical afternoon or evening the line still goes out the door. On weekends, an army of youngsters on bikes, scooters and skateboards make the Strawberry Parfait with its picnic tables the place to meet and eat.

Jim has worked in the food industry in one way or another since he was a teenager. He gave up a job in food services and setting up kitchens in nursing homes to get back to his roots, so to speak. He got his start at the Snack Shack at Hull's Paragon Park years ago and later owned sub-shops.

"At 51, I felt like doing it all over again," he says. "It's like another home here. I love the business."

Barbie" phone call that came into her Newbury Street office several months ago actually wasn't the first. Ford and her agency have spearheaded similar campaigns before, as last October the Ford Management Group was commissioned by the Mattel toy company to provide a whopping 2600 "live Barbies" for every Wal-Mart location nationwide. So just why exactly? Ford thankfully explains for those a bit confused.

"The thrust of these programs — known in the industry as 'meet and greets'— is to get Moms, Dads and children into the stores," Ford says. "They have their photo taken with the model, and hopefully walk away having bought something."

Events like these operate with the sponsoring company providing Barbie her famous pink gown, while Ford's agency supplies the models themselves. And just where do these hordes of Barbies come from? Good question. It's not as if Ford Management Group is out plucking lookalikes from off the street (although in a rare instance one actually was "found" on the MBTA), but instead the company pulls from its own ten offices across the country —occasionally utilizing the Internet to recruit additional help.

In truth, in comparison to the 2000-plus Wal-Mart event, the Toys R Us event which went off with hardly a hitch a few weeks ago almost felt like kids' stuff. Today, Ford appears to handle everything with ease, perhaps because she's been "doing it" since she was a kid. A former model herself having worked her way through school, Ford founded her agency (not affiliated with "that other" Ford company for those wondering) at the ripe young age of 23.

And now, several decades later, the former jet-setting fashion model finds herself leading — well, not exactly a quiet life — but a more consistent one with her family here in Cohasset. For the past 16 years Ford (a native of Braintree) has resided here in town on Hobart Lane with husband Curt, son Fletcher Smalzel (age 12), and daughter Colby Smalzel (age 8).

Candy Ford, founder and president of Ford Management Group, relaxes in her home on Atlantic Avenue. The company was commissioned by the Toys R Us retail chain to provide hundreds of Barbie lookalikes for its 705 stores.

Leading agency

Meanwhile, life at The Ford Management Group has been anything but predictable. Ford's agency is among the leading agencies supplying men, women and child models for print campaigns, fashion shows and promotional events. Over the years Ford's agency has supplied countless costume characters to events like trade shows, as well as providing promotional models for concerts like The Backstreet Boys. To the company's credit, The Ford Management Group even gathered the "Bud Girls" for the recent Bush vs. Gore debate at UMASS (Did you know the event even had Bud Girls?) And on the whole, "What our company does is very diverse," sums up Ford. "Really it's an awful lot of fun."

However, with all the requests coming in, it's fair to say that for the past year Ford and her agency have been living and breathing Barbie. "It's true we've sort of been living in Barbie World for a while now," laughs Ford. "All of the staff has been looking everywhere to find them. It's been sort of a big Barbie hunt!" In actuality, the "breathing Barbies" have been portrayed by everyone from school teachers, to college students, to lawyers and investment analysts — and have even represented a surprising spectrum of cultural backgrounds. "Some stores actually requested more ethnic looking models," explains Ford. "Particularly areas where, say, the African American or Hispanic population was higher. Those stores wanted their Barbies to represent their community."

And finally, just in case you have any left over questions, Ford patiently fills in the gaps. Aside from the requisite blonde locks, such events' Barbies need to stand at least 5 ft. 6 ins. in height (including heels), and range in age from 18 to 25 so as to do properly do justice to the doll's youthful image. No tattoos, body piercings are allowed, while earrings are limited to one in each ear. But no, in case you're curious, participants are not expected to meet the "real Barbie"'s impossible proportions, as even Ford herself admits, "no real person has a body like that."

On the other hand, Ford's models are expected to duplicate the real doll's demeanor. While on stage at the promotion location, the sponsoring companies ask lookalikes to "maintain the Barbie personality," and "strive to physically portray a little girl's fantasy of Barbie's persona." Ford elaborates. "The Barbie had to be smiling, happy, polite, and so on. . . . It's all about role playing, and the models all get into it. They sort of become little actresses for the day."

Ford goes on to report that while she certainly hasn't spoken to every Barbie that's taken part individually, "on the whole 98 percent of them say they had a blast." And while she admits she has gotten a couple of negative comments from the public at large, by and large the response has been positive. "In the end it's all about little girls playing with dolls," she says.

Fits the times

Besides, the doll's image has adapted to fit the times, reminds the former model. No longer "all about fashion," the millennium Barbie has received a personality makeover. "Barbie used to be seen as kind of ditzy," offers Ford, "but today she's all about careers." It's true today's toy stores offer the dolls dressed up as everything from police women to basketball players, and in general Ford believes the doll's popularity has reached an all-time high. Today, accompanying her own daughter Colby down the toy aisles, Ford says she can't believe just how much there is out there, in comparison to the days when she had her own collection. "It's funny," says Ford thinking back, "I didn't have the Barbie Dream House as a child, but rather the Fashion Boutique. I guess I always had an interest in fashion and beauty."

So is daughter Colby similarly mad for Miss Barbie? A resounding, "YES," answers Mom. "We're big into Barbie at our house," adds Ford, "We've got just about everything." A dedicated follower, Colby even traveled to the Cambridge Toys R Us store to have her own photo taken — accompanied by her Dad as Mom had to field phone calls at the office that Saturday.

But Barbie isn't the sole interest mother and daughter hold in common. Colby occasionally comes into Mom's office to help out answering phones, and has herself expressed an interest in "the biz." When not practicing diving or gymnastics, Colby occasionally steps up on the runway, having recently modeled for an area Reebok fashion show.

As for mom, it looks like Ford hasn't seen the last of our lady Barbie. "Given the success we will probably do it again," reports Ford. But in truth she really doesn't mind. At heart, Ford says she's still a fan . . . and while the super-successful Ford won't go so far as to say Barbie inspired her own career in fashion, the fair-haired, five foot nine Ford admits she did indeed adore dressing up her favorite doll. After all, asks Ford honestly, "Really, what little girl didn't?"

Cohasset's Sheerin manages to standout in vastly different athletic forums

Gymnastics and lacrosse. I don't see the parallels. Gymnastics is a consummate individual sport. Lacrosse is a consummate team game.

Success in gymnastics is based largely on finesse, grace and style. Success in lacrosse is based largely on speed, guile and toughness.

Kristin Sheerin, likewise, does not see many carryover skills. Indeed, she seems as just as much of a loss as most in explaining what makes her a standout in both sports.

"I guess there aren't a lot of similarities," conceded the Cohasset High junior with a grin. "Maybe conditioning and mental toughness, and I think the strength gymnastics build up would help in just about any sport. Other than that, I guess there aren't too many things they have in common. But I really do love both of them."

Make no mistake about it, though: gymnastics is Kristin's first love, and it shows. She was the overall gymnastics champion for the Pilgrim Conference 2 this winter, and holds the Cohasset High records in all four events (beam, bars, vault and floor exercise), as well as in the All-Around. Several colleges no doubt have their eye on her already, many of which will descend once NCAA guidelines permit recruiting to begin.

Knowing gymnastics is her ticket into a good college, and a means for saving her parents a considerable amount of cash, Kristin practices three to four times per week year round. She's already qualified to

Buick leads the way in 18-1 lambasting of Bourne to keep boys perfect

Spurred by senior tri-captain Ronan Buick's six goals and three assists, the Cohasset High boys' lacrosse team overpowered Bourne on Friday, and remained undefeated after four games.

The Skippers, ranked among the top three Div. 2 teams in Massachusetts, had little trouble with the Cape Codders, taking a 7-1 halftime lead, and then going on to outscore their hosts 11-0 in the third and fourth quarters.

The senior defensive unit of tri-captain Geoff McWilliams, Justin Langham and Greg Figureido held Bourne to only 10 shots for the entire game. Cohasset goalies Kyle Weber and Nick Murphy were called upon to make only four saves between them.

"Our defense is proving to be our strength," said coach Kevin Orcutt. "Bourne was difficult to play, because of the field conditions, the wind, and their inexperience. We were missing three key offensive players, which meant we had to step up the defensive intensity. And we did."

The senior defenders were

Boys and girls squads take down Carver

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

Both the boys and the girls tennis teams continued their strong starts with big wins over the Crusaders of Carver.

The girls team improved to 3-0 on the year with a clean sweep in Carver.

Through their first three matches, the Ladies have won 5-0, 4-1 and 5-0 over Hanover, Norton and Carver, respectively.

The line-up of this match up featured first and second singles players, sophomores Lindsay Grossman and Julie Shea winning their matches handily.

Grossman took her match 6-0, 6-2. This extended her perfect stretch of 14 varsity matches without even losing a set.

Shea took her match into the third set, but still won, continuing her own unbeaten streak.

Freshman Holly Graham played third singles for the first time, but inexperience did not stop her, as she racked up another point for her team.

Junior captain Kelly Stone, one of the most experienced players on the squad, paired up with the extremely hard-hitting freshman Courtney Caron to take the win at first doubles.

At second doubles, sophomores Molly Flanagan and Taylor O'Brien ousted their opponents in just two sets.

At 3-0, the girls team can clinch a playoff berth as early as next week, where they have matches at the Green Wave in Abington and at home against fierce neighboring rival Scituate.

"In ten years, we have never not made it," said tenth year girls coach Sarah Meehan. "It is really a great thing, but there is a little bit of pressure."

The Lady Crusaders knew this would be a tough year, after losing six of last year's top seven to graduation.

Evan's Memory well served

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

You could see the young, handsome face everywhere you turned at Sunday's inaugural Evan's Run in Norwell. The image of Evan Henry was on the T-shirt of the 250-plus volunteers and another couple hundred or so of the 686 runners and walkers who competed in the 10- and 5K races over the rural, sun-drenched streets after a morning's worth of races for the kids.

Evan left this world last summer after accidentally drowning in the family pool. A bright, good-natured 11 year old, Evan was autistic and this day of events was held to raise money for the Evan Henry Foundation which will help autistic children and their families.

Evan wasn't there in person, but he was certainly there in spirit. Just ask any one of the faculty members of the Cole Elementary School who competed.

"It's a great turnout with lots of people who knew Evan," said pre-kindergarten teacher Sue Barrett, who had Evan in her class when he was 3-years old.

Principal Jack Shea said the 15-member "Team Cole" would assure "A piece of Evan's early years would be represented."

The number of runners and walkers from the Cole school will undoubtedly be even larger for next year's race. "We'll get more people together for it," said Barrett.

Race director Chuck Martin said from the start that he wasn't going to skimp on anything in staging the event. The race committee members, several of whom have autistic children of their own, compete in a few national tournaments this summer, one in Virginia, the other in Florida, venues where she hopes to entice a few more potential college suitors.

Lacrosse is her release from this world.

"It's easy to see how some gymnasts can burn out," offered the 16-year-old, who took up lacrosse for the first time as a freshman, tagging along with a few friends who'd played the sport in youth programs. "Gymnastics is extremely intense, and there's a lot of pressure. Sometimes it's hard not to get caught up in that. Lacrosse helps me avoid that. I have a ball out there."

If there's anyone happier about Kristin's happening upon lacrosse than Kristin, it's Cohasset coach Kathy Guadiano.

"She's really something to watch out there," said Guadiano, of her top scoring midfielder. "She does it all for us. When we need a big play or a big goal, she's the one we look to."

After leading the team in scoring as a sophomore with 42 goals last season, Kristin was chosen to captain the team this season as a junior along with friend and fellow gymnast Carlie Carter. She's picked up where she left off this season with a team leading 19 goals in five games to help lead the Lady Skippers to a 3-1-1 start.

As a midfielder, Kristin is forced to play both ends of the field, so no one runs more than her. Yet, she is one of the few players on this young team who has not come off the field yet this season.

"I just can't afford to take her out," explains Guadiano. "Fortunately, this is where her conditioning from gymnastics really comes in to play. She never seems to wear down."

What makes her endurance even more impressive is the fact that Kristin, all 5-feet-100-pounds of her, is out there against girls who, for the most part, tower over her.

One would figure the physical pounding alone would take its toll, particularly considering that she does not shy away from it, as witnessed by her clear team-leading total in ground ball pickups, a play on which most collisions seem to occur.

"She's a lot stronger than she looks, and she's definitely a lot tougher than most people who look at her would think," lauds Guadiano.

In fact, surprise in general is probably the leading attribute of Kristin's game.

"I don't think people expect her to be as fast as she is," said the coach. "She just comes down at her casual speed and then she just all of a sudden turns on the jets to kick it into another gear to blow past defenders before they know what happened."

And then there's the powerful and accurate shot that Guadiano surmises must be the result of wrists conditioned by work on the uneven bars.

"Nobody expects such a big shot to come from such a small girl, but she just flicks it off from anywhere hard and accurate," appraised Guadiano. "It's just deadly."

And then there's the leadership aspect Kristin offers.

"Being the captain of a team as young as ours isn't easy, but Kristin has been a great leader," praised coach G. "She can be vocal at times, but most of the time she leads by example. She has a great work ethic, and the other girls work hard to emulate that. She's also had 100 percent attendance even with her busy schedule, so her teammates respect that."

So if gymnastics doesn't work out, would Kristin consider concentrating more on lacrosse in the hopes of a scholarship?

"No," she replied quickly. "Lacrosse is just fun for me. That's all I want out of it."

agreed. Martin never has been one to go less than all out when putting on event and Sunday may have been his finest hour.

There was a huge tent with tables loaded with hot dogs, soft drinks, fruit, spring water, bagels, you name it. The "Rocky" theme blasted from the sound system as the bulging field surged forward down the high school's access road at 10:30 a.m. on the nose. Donations from dozens of sponsors were raffled off, ranging from gift certificates to local restaurants to weekend getaways to Newport, RI and Burlington, VT.

Geoff Hennessy, founder of the Quincy Track Club and North Quincy track coach, said the race was the best organized first-year event he has ever attended, and he has been to a few in his 20 years as a coach.

The day did tug on the emotions of Evan's mother, Carol Henry. She spent more than 10 hours the previous day making last-minute preparations and was up at 6 a.m. on Sunday, ready for another long, bittersweet day. In all, she made more than 200 signs for the race, with the help of her children.

"It's good for my kids to see something good come out of it," she said.

Henry was admittedly taken aback by the sheer numbers of people who flocked to the event.

"I was absolutely thrilled with the amount of people who turned out," she said. "The sponsors were very generous and it was wonderful seeing everyone with Evan's little face (on their T-shirts)."

It was a day that Evan wouldn't have missed if he was still with us today.

"He would have liked the music and loved running along with everyone," said Henry, who was greeted with a roar of applause when she neared the finish of the 10K race.

But it was the framed, matted photograph of a smiling Evan that tugged at the heartstring more than anything all day. Right below the photo was a race number, No. 1.

Carol Henry plans to hang the photograph on the wall in Evan's room.

* * * * * *

Hull's Jamie Gallagher found the 10K course very much to his liking as he ran away from the 270-runner field for a 33-minute, 16-second victory. Gallagher was followed across the finish line by Whitman's Bob Ruel in second (35:01), John Kessinger of Duxbury (37:01) and Brockton residents Michael Burke (37:30) and Frank Nelson (38:10).

Falmouth's Nancy Correia finished more than a minute in front of Brighton's Kirsten Tilney to take the women's title in 42:18. Tilney followed in 43:33. Joanne Hill of Cohasset was just five seconds behind Tilney with her 43:38.

Terry McNutt of Needham had a 13-second cushion on Pembroke's Matt Vercollone when he crossed the finish line in 16:24 to take the 5K race. Vercollone, a standout runner at Silver Lake High School, was timed in 16:37. Somerville's Oleg Shpyrko was third (17:21), followed by Boston's John Bradley (17:32) and Brian McCarthy of Norwell (17:38), who took fourth and fifth, respectively.

Sisters Kayla and Lydia Halloran of Norwell went 1-2 in 20:49 and 21:38, respectively. Duxbury's Fran Haney took third in a time of 22:20.

ably supported by sophomore longstick midfielder Nick Spirito, who had a goal, and freshmen Conor Buick and Stephen Davis.

On offense, Buick proved too much for Bourne's defenders, going over, under and through the coverage almost at will. Buick got help from sophomore attackman Curt Kahn, who scored the first two goals of the game and three overall, as well as from Weber, who played the fourth quarter on attack and also scored three, and senior tri-captain Lane Forrer (two goals and an assist). Junior attackman Jason Moore pitched in with two goals and an assist, while junior midfielder Sean Chase had a goal and an assist. Sophomore middie Pat Reardon scored the first goal of his career, while fellow soph middies Robert Hickey and Matt Davis each had a pair of assists.

The only negative, said coach Orcutt, was a hand injury suffered by Figureido in pre-game warmups. After getting it iced and taped, the senior defender played the entire second half.

"What was good about this game was that we improved our play in the second half," said Orcutt. "But we can't fool ourselves into thinking we don't have to get much better for the opposition we face next week."

The Skippers will host another Pilgrim Conference foe, Falmouth, at Alumni Field on Friday in the season's first night game. The face-off is scheduled for 7 p.m.

Boys lacrosse notes

Despite the trepidation expressed by coach Orcutt, the Skippers did go on to handle Sandwich with relative ease on Tuesday, taking a 14-5 decision.

Jason Moore paced the offensive attack with four goals and an assist. Paul Previtte and Tom Anderson each added a pair of goals. Goalie Kyle Weber made 23 saves to backstop the win.

outlasted their Carver counterparts with a 3-2 victory at home to improve to 2-1.

The team was able to rebound from an early loss by number one singles player, senior Erik Shea. He fell 6-0, 6-1 to standout senior Russell Crooks.

Carver also took second doubles, needing three sets to beat senior Casey Brewer and freshman Robert Carpenter.

Cohasset did take second singles for the third consecutive match, with senior captain Christopher Golden disposing of sophomore DJ Lenahan in straight sets.

At first doubles, also a rank Cohasset has yet to lose this year, senior captain Jeffry Scribner and sophomore David Ingber won out 6-1, 6-1.

With the team match tied at 2-2, all eyes were on the third singles match, with Cohasset junior Joe Niessink down in the second set 5-3 after winning the first. But Niessink battled the hot conditions to rally for a 6-3, 7-5 victory.

Local DAR good citizens honored

On Sunday, April 22, the Colonel Thomas Lothrop/Old Colony Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution honored recipients of the DAR Good Citizen Award. Sponsored through the chapter, the winners recognized were Daniel Duffy of Cohasset High School, Jamie Lee Watts of Weymouth High School, and Carly Muise of Whitman-Hanson High School.

The DAR Good Citizen Award is given annually to members of the senior class of accredited high schools. The students are selected by the faculty and voted on by members of the senior class. They must have the qualities of dependability, service, leadership and patriotism. The program is recognized by the National Association Secondary School Principals.

Daniel Duffy of Cohasset High School is the daughter of Dan and Rosemary Duffy. He is secretary of the National Honor Society and captain of the wrestling team. He has also participated in football and track. He works year round with the South Shore Collaborative at Cohasset High School, as a teaching assistant for the special needs students. He will attend McGill University in Montreal, Quebec, Canada and plans to major in international business.

At the reception held in their honor in Cohasset, each recipient was presented with a pin and certificate from the National Society of the DAR. They received a gift from the local chapter. They were also given citations from their state representatives arranged through State Rep Garrett Bradley. State Sen. Robert Hedlund also presented citations from the State Senate.

CHS celebrates golden anniversary

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello everyone. This week is bringing some interesting weather for all of our students and staff members in the schools to work with. I remember how tough it is in the spring to stay focused, hang in there kids and make sure to work hard for your teachers.

I am so excited about this column this week as we have many great things happening in May and June. As you may have heard, a great concert family event is being held on Friday, May 25 at 7 p.m. in the Sullivan Gym at the CHS! Who is it you ask? Well, it is none other than "Ball in the House", a group of six guys, six voices, that's all! They are phenomenal and the kids in this town as well as all their grownups are in for a real treat! This group has toured with groups like N Sync, 98 Degrees and Paula Cole to name a few. The event is being sponsored by the Deer Hill fifth graders and is something that all are very excited about. Tickets for this event are $10 and can be purchased through any fifth grader or by calling the Deer Hill School at 781-383-6115.

Also happening that same weekend is the "Golden Anniversary" celebration of the Cohasset High School in honor of its 50th Birthday. On Friday, there will be an open house with several guest speakers from the last 50 years. On Saturday, a great family day is planned with music, memorabilia and reminiscing happening all day long. The full schedule will be coming in the next few weeks.

for us," he said.

The chief explained that during burning season, residents call each day for a permit. Permits are not issued if the wind is 20 m.p.h., either sustained or in gusts.

Once the permit is issued, it is the responsibility of the resident to keep the fire under control. Fires must not be within 75 feet of the nearest building and there must be a hose nearby, Lincoln said. No burning is allowed before 10 a.m. or after 4 p.m.

However, even with precautions, fires can get out of hand.

"Unfortunately, it happens," Lincoln said.

Local artists shine at Boston Music Awards

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The 2001 Boston Music Awards, held last Thursday at Boston's Orpheum Theatre, should go down as Revenge of the Rockers, Act II.

Last year's BMA ceremony marked the initial coming of age for the Boston area hard rock/heavy metal alternative club scene, after many years of being slighted or overlooked from the local awards game in favor of other musical genres such as pop, R&B and rap/hip-hop. North Shore-based thrash-metal rockers Godsmack made their momentous breakthrough with four major award wins, while other high-energy guitar-band scenemakers Sheila Devine and Powerman 5K also enjoyed multiple award honors.

This year's presentation, the 14th annual for the BMA, continued the trend. Godsmack was in the major spotlight once again, taking home the awards for Act of the Year, Album of the Year for "Awake," Outstanding Rock Band and Male Vocalist of the Year for front man Sully Erna. Sheila Devine was also back in the winner's circle, this time with a single honor for Rock Band (Indie Label), while edgy power-popsters American Hi-Fi, led by ex-Letters To Cleo drummer-turned-singer/guitarist Stacy Jones, snapped up the prize for Rising Star (and delivered one of the evening's most riveting live performances with their hook-heavy alternative radio-hit "Flavor of the Weak" (sic)).

South Shore nominees have never been without their share of award wins or attention at the BMA events, and this year's was no exception. Most notable of the winners from our area was red-hot R&B/funk/rock band Superhoney, fronted by Hingham's own powerhouse vocalist Joan Pimental, who grabbed the prize for Outstanding Funk Band, beating out a very formidable field of six other nominees of bands with names from Boston Horns and Soulwork to Lovewhip and Who's the Fat Guy.

"There were so many worthy nominees, we didn't expect to win," Pimental told the press corps in the medio room at Orpheum following the award win. "We're very excited and floored, really, to win against so many talented bands." The singer went on to let the reporters know that Superhoney has just finished recording a new album and will be having CD release parties May 10, 11 and 12 in the Boston area.

Also representing the South Shore, Norwell's Susan Tedeschi once again scored the Outstanding Blues Act award, despite having not released a new CD or performed much locally within the past year. But the blues-rockin' singer/guitarist is apparently still hot from the momentum of her critically acclaimed 1998 Just Won't Burn CD, which she promises to follow up with a new disc in late 2001 or early 2002. Duxbury native alterna-pop songbird Juliana Hatfield also won for Outstanding Female Vocalist (Indie Label).

Other BMA winners from the hard-rocking ranks included multiple honorees C60, who took the awards for Single (Indie Label) for "Crazy," New Rock Band (Indie Label) and Club Band, Staind — fronted by Springfield singer/guitarist Aaron Lewis — for Video of the Year with "Home," and boisterous Celtic-rockers the Dropkick Murphys for Hard-Rock Band. In another fitting sign, sponsorship for the BMA even shifted this year from Kahlua to WAAF-FM, the longtime champion of hard-and-heavy-rock-only on Boston area radio.

Most notable of the winners from our area was red-hot R&B/funk/rock band Superhoney, fronted by Hingham's own powerhouse vocalist Joan Pimental, who grabbed the prize for Outstanding Funk Band.

Besides honoring the current Boston music scene, the BMA has always been about remembering the city's music history. The Hall of Fame award presentation, of which Aerosmith, the J. Geils Band, James Taylor and Carly Simon have been past recipients, this year took on a somber note honoring a non-musician for the first time in popular local scene DJ, promoter and friend Mikey Dee, who is still recovering from a debilitating brain-stem stroke suffered early last year.

Also, Carly Simon was on hand to present the Ertegun Impact Award to famed Atlantic Records producer Arif Mardin, who has been at the helm on classic albums for the label by Aretha Franklin, the Young Rascals and the Modern Jazz Quartet to name a few. The Ertegun Impact Award is honored at the BMA for outstanding national or global contributions to music, debuting at last year's event when it was received by its own founder, Mardin's friend and Atlantic Records co-founder Ahmet Ertegun.

Super flashback

Hingham vocalist keeping it fresh for successful funk band

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Superhoney is the kind of band that Boston area club goers haven't heard in a long, long time.

Or, given the thirtysomething-and-younger clientele frequenting the clubs these days — maybe never.

Back in the late 60s and early 70s bands playing old-school funk rock and soul/R&B were everywhere — from clubs to concert halls. Today, Superhoney's leading its revival with a new flair.

The sound, urban, earthy, energized and sweaty, and characterized by a full live band of real singers and musicians playing real instruments, was typified most visibly by classic-era Aretha Franklin, Janis Joplin, The Ike and Tina Turner Revue, Delaney & Bonnie with Eric Clapton and even, to a point, early Chicago and Blood Sweat & Tears.

Flash-forward some three decades and we find Superhoney, a Brighton-based sextet led by a Hingham native and vocal dynamo named Joan Pimental, who is ready to take this soul/R&B from an important but now overlooked or fuzzily remembered era and carry it into the new millenium. The band's musical ambition paid one of its biggest dividends yet last week when Superhoney won the prize for Outstanding Funk Band at the 14th annual Boston Music Awards event in Boston.

Superhoney, lead by Hingham's Joan Pimental recently earned Best Funk Band honors at Boston Music Awards. The band's new CD release is expected soon.

"Our sound is pretty much an old-school mix of rock, funk and soul with a new school flavor. The kind with a solid sense of musical roots from the 60s and early 70s but updated to fit in with today's club scene," said Pimental, 29, from her home in Hingham last weekend where she was savoring her band's BMA triumph. "It's actually kind of hard to describe our music sometimes, except that everyone in the band has always been a big fan of late 60s/early 70s rock/soul/R&B and it's definitely the main thing that influences and motivates us as a band."

Along with Pimental, Superhoney includes guitarist Doug Sherman, keyboardist Paul Schultheis, bassist Scott Watson, percussionist Sean Nelson and drummer Dean Johnston. Together, this ensemble offers enough funk groove, wah-wah and reverb powered guitar, jazz-inspired, vibrato-laden electric piano and atmospheric, Hammond B3-programmed organ to make its old-school influences unmistakable. In its live club shows, the band and its sound are often augmented by guest player spots on alto, tenor or baritone sax, adding that much more genuine and tasteful soul flavor to the proceedings.

"What we play is definitely a live sound, made for playing onstage in the clubs for loud, high-energy fans," Pimental said. "The ideal situation for us is when we're headlining our own club bill and have two hours or more to play our sets. That is when we can really pump up the intensity and stretch out with the jamming impulses, and not have to worry about pacing ourselves like we have when we're limited to maybe a half-hour at some shows."

"Our sound is pretty much an old-school mix of rock, funk and soul with a new school flavor. The kind with a solid sense of musical roots from the 60s and early 70s but updated to fit in with today's club scene."

Superhoney lead singer
Joan Pimental

As for the soulful, brazen Pimental's vocal influences, she's noted the many references and comparisons in the local music press. "I've listened to and picked up from the major vocalists of all the eras of gospel, blues, jazz, rock and soul/R&B, everyone from Mahalia Jackson to Billie Holiday, Etta James and Janis Joplin. But my single biggest influence and my favorite singer for all-time is Aretha Franklin. One of my goals in life, in fact, is to meet her."

Pimental's, and her band's, distinct influences can be heard to full, exhilarating effect on their 1999 breakthrough CD, No Standing, released on the band's own Moxxy Records label. Several live tracks on the disc recorded before wildly enthusiastic crowds at Boston's Bill's Bar and Berklee Performance Center show the band more than capable of living up to those onstage ambitions.

Superhoney's soon-to-be-released next CD is promised to have a different flavor than its first disc, in an attempt to appeal to a broader audience. CD release parties for the new disc will be held on May 10 at the House of Blues in Cambridge, May 11 at Lilli's in Somerville, and May 12 at Harper's Ferry in Allston.

"You have to do new things with your music to keep it fresh and regenerated, and to keep fans interested and give them a reason to keep coming out to the shows," Pimental said.

Young magician uses slight of hand to lend helping hand

By Seth Jacobson

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. .

Spirit of Community

Although he is a master of illusions, it takes more than magic to have the kind of heart and compassion that Dane Grigas has.

Grigas, 17, a Pembroke resident and a student at Silver Lake High School, enjoys being part of the community and giving back to it and others.

Having hands that are both quicker than the eye ready to reach out to help others came together recently for Grigas. In November, his mother a Braintree teacher told him about a young girl suffering from a serious medical condition

"One day, she brought home this flyer about this sick girl who had this rare heart problem."

Grigas who has been learning new tricks since age 3, decided to combine his own love of magic and desire to lend a helping hand by hosting a magic show fundraiser for the girl to raise money to cover the cost of her medical bills. The event was a big success for everyone involved, Grigas said.

"We raised $1,000, and then an anonymous donor matched that amount, so we ended up with $2,000. I really feel for this girl, and I figured this would be a good thing to do for her. I love performing so it was a win-win situation."

Grigas performed many tricks of the trade including cutting his assistant into thirds.

Due to her illness, the little girl could not attend the show and still cannot return to school.

"I never did get a chance to actually meet her," Grigas added. "But hopefully, I will someday soon."

In the meantime, the young magician enjoys putting on shows whenever possible and currently serves as the president of the Society of Young Magicians of Boston. Grigas has been a member of the organization since he was eight, and has had an opportunity to meet celebrity magicians including David Copperfield through the experience.

Grigas likes the idea of making magic for a good cause.

"I haven't done a lot of other fundraisers," Grigas said, "but for the past three years, I've put on an annual free magic show at my church, St. Thecla's Parish in Pembroke."

And magic isn't his only method of giving back.

For the past two summers, Grigas has taken part in the Appalachia Service Project, an outreach program which provides home-improvement services to low-income areas of states luck Kentucky and Virginia.

"The first year I went to Kentucky, and the second year I went to Virginia," Grigas said. "It's kind of like a Habitat For Humanity thing where the bottom line is helping other people in need."

Grigas said he and other Silver Lake High School students performed tasks like building and fixing up homes' walls and replacing gutters. He said he has plans of participating in the program again this summer.

April Spirit of Community winner Dane Grigas shares a magic moment with master illusionist David Copperfield.

"I started participating in the program because I just thought it would be cool to travel outside the state and see other parts of the country," he said. "It has made me really appreciate what I have."

Even though his schedule is tight, Grigas still found time the past two summers to be a counselor at DARE summer camps sponsored by the Pembroke Police Department.

"Mostly six-graders took part in it," Grigas said. "We focused on coming up with different team-building activities, and we took field trips like whale watches and even a trip to the Plymouth house of correction."

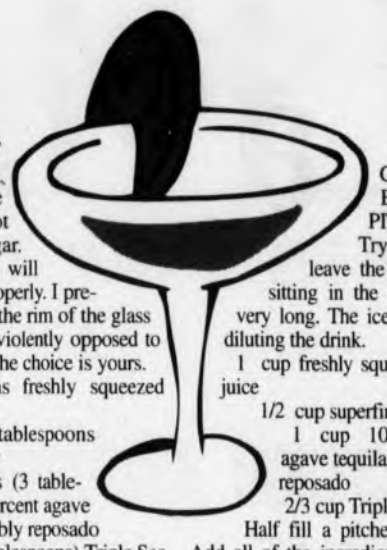
Margaritas

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

My wife, Adrienne, and I recently stopped into a local Boston bar just before a movie to kill 15 minutes and $10. A sign outside the southwest-themed bar advertised the "Best Margarita in Boston" so, like sheep to the slaughter, we anted up the $4.50 hoping that a sunny drink might lift us out of the late winter doldrums. Well, you know the rest of the story. The drinks were huge, tasted like a lemon-lime can of Powerade, and contained enough sugar to pay for my dentist's recent trip to St. Maarten.



A good margarita is about subtlety and balance, a sophisticated mix of lime juice, tequila, sugar, and an orange-flavored liqueur. Some folks use lemon juice while others, like my own test kitchen at Cook's Illustrated, make the process so complicated that one is loathe to invest the time and trouble. I was searching for a last minute recipe, but one that hit all the right chords without any false notes.

The first, most important issue was the choice of tequila. For my tests, I used only 100 percent blue agave. (Tequila is made from the agave plant – some producers add cane or corn syrup to produce "mixed" tequilas.) There are three basic types of tequila: gold (or silver), aged, and reposado. The gold and silver tequilas are not aged and are therefore harsh and difficult to blend successfully with other ingredients. The aged, which is placed in oak barrels for up to six years, is smooth and tannic, so much so that the flavor is overpowering. My first choice was the reposado tequila. It is "rested" for up to 12 months and is therefore less harsh than gold yet less dominant than the aged variety.

The next issue was the orange-flavored liqueur. I tested Cointreau, Grand Marnier, and Triple Sec and preferred the latter. Both of the more expensive orange liqueurs were overpowering compared to the Triple Sec. As with the rested tequila, the Triple Sec was less aggressive while the Cointreau and Grand Marnier were too headstrong to be team players. I settled on 2 tablespoons Triple Sec to 3 tablespoons tequila.

Finally, I had to decide how to deal with the juice. Although some recipes include lemon juice, I prefer the flavor of just limes. Although the Cook's Illustrated recipe suggests steeping the juice, sugar, and zest for several hours (the results are excellent), I am incapable of planning ahead when it comes to a mixed drink. I found that simple freshly-squeezed lime juice sweetened with superfine sugar was just fine especially since the juice is being mixed with both tequila and Triple Sec. In terms of sweetness, I found that half as much sugar as lime juice was about right.

In terms of balancing flavors, equal amounts of tequila and lime juice mixed with a smaller helping of Triple Sec was ideal. (Many recipes use equal amounts of all three ingredients.) I have provided two recipes below – I suggest that you make these by the pitcher since margaritas don't last.

THE BEST MARGARITA

Be sure to use superfine, not regular, sugar. Otherwise, it will not dissolve properly. I prefer salt around the rim of the glass but others are violently opposed to this tradition. The choice is yours.

3 tablespoons freshly squeezed lime juice
1 1/2 tablespoons superfine sugar
1 1/2 ounces (3 tablespoons) 100 percent agave tequila, preferably reposado
1 ounce (2 tablespoons) Triple Sec

Half fill a shaker glass with ice. Add all of the ingredients and shake together well. Strain into a cocktail glass (salted rim optional) or serve over ice in a double old-fashioned glass. Serve immediately Serves 1

MARGARITAS BY THE PITCHER

Try not to leave the margaritas sitting in the pitcher for very long. The ice will melt, diluting the drink.

1 cup freshly squeezed lime juice
1/2 cup superfine sugar
1 cup 100 percent agave tequila, preferably reposado
2/3 cup Triple Sec

Half fill a pitcher with ice. Add all of the ingredients and stir until thoroughly combined and chilled. Strain into cocktail glasses (salted rim optional) or over ice in double old fashioned glasses. Serve immediately. Serves 6

Planting and growing the regal rhododendrons

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Green thumbs up

A touch of summer-like weather has catapulted our gardens into bloom as flowering shrubs, trees and bulbs paint the landscape with dazzling color. The early-blooming Japanese andromedas (Pieris japonica) grace the landscape with clusters of cascading, tiny, fragrant bells in shades of white, pink or red, set against a background of glossy, green foliage. Colorful clumps of daffodils dot lawns and gardens, lifting their trumpets to the warm sunshine to herald the long-awaited arrival of springtime. The large, silky, silver-colored buds of magnolias have started to unfold revealing the satiny, white, multi-petaled blossoms of star magnolias (M. stellata) and the spectacular pink and white flowers of saucer magnolias (M. soulangeana). Clouds of cheerful, sunny-yellow blooms embellish nearly every property, as forsythia bushes burst into bloom while in our wetlands, the fluffy, rusty-red flowers of the swamp maples are electrified when backlit by the setting sun, serenaded by the distinctive, resonating tones of the spring peepers as evening approaches. Spring fever is in full swing.

The rosy-lavender blossoms of the popular "PJM" rhododendron appear to be on the verge of erupting into bloom as another member of this expansive family of woody plants joins the parade of glorious color. Developed locally at Weston Nurseries in Hopkinton, the "PJM" rhody, and its bright-pink relative, R. "Olga Mezzitt," offer homeowners hardy, early-flowering, drought-tolerant shrubs which reach a maximum size of 3 to 6 feet and display elegant, mahogany-colored foliage during the fall and winter months if grown in full sun. These small-leaf rhododendrons, like their cousins, the deciduous azaleas, can tolerate sunnier, more-exposed environments than the large-leaf rhododendrons and evergreen azaleas which tend to prefer sheltered sites in partial shade.

All rhododendrons require a moist, but well-drained, fertile soil, rich in organic matter. Our typically acid soils are usually ideal, but heavy, wet, clay soils should be avoided. Bright light is essential for optimum growth and blooming. The procedure for planting these ornamental shrubs follows the recommended techniques set forth for planting most woody plants in recent years. Prepare a hole no deeper than the root ball of your plant but two to three times wider in diameter. For sandy or poor soils, amend the planting medium with organic material in the form of peat moss, leaf mold or compost. Be sure to loosen pot-bound roots in container grown plants. One of the most common mistakes made when planting rhododendrons or other woody plants is to place the root ball too deeply which often leads to the plant's demise.

Soak the root system and the soil around your newly set plant to settle the soil and remove air pockets, following with a 2- to 3-inch layer of pine bark mulch or similar covering to help conserve moisture and to maintain cool soil temperatures. Cover the spreading root system but avoid letting the mulch come in contact with the woody trunk or branches as this may encourage disease or insect infestations.

The removal of spent flowers soon after blooming may help to bolster bud-set for the subsequent season but care must be taken not to inadvertently remove new shoots which emerge around the base of the seed heads about the same time. Deadheading may be impractical on especially large specimens.

To prune a large-leaf rhododendron, cuts are best made at a joint in the branch to allow for growth at that point. Small-leaf rhodies and azaleas may be pruned at any point on their branches as they will sprout new growth from anywhere. Pruning is ideally performed immediately after the completion of the bloom season.

With so many varieties from which to choose at our local nurseries, gardeners may find the selection process overwhelming. Be sure to do your homework, and take into consideration your own particular site's exposure, soil, and allotted space. Look for some of my personal favorites including the hardy, deciduous, Royal azalea (R. schlippenbachii) with smooth, pink flower trusses, and the flame azaleas (R. calendulaceum) with brilliant orange or yellow flowers. Among the large-leaf rhododendrons, I am particularly fond of R. "Scintillation" and the Yakushimanum rhododendrons (often referred to as "Yaks") which demonstrate compact, dense growth, and a unique coating of soft, fuzzy, suede-like material known as indumentum on the underside of the leaf which is also present on the upper surface of new, emerging foliage. Yaku "Prince," "Ken Janeck," "Crete," and "Mist Maiden" are representatives of this handsome group of small-scale shrubs.

The Massachusetts Chapter of the Rhododendron Society publishes a list of "proven performers" for our area as not all rhododendrons are locally hardy. On Sunday, May 27, they will host their annual plant sale and auction at the Waltham Field Station, 240 Beaver St. Contact Dorry (phone: (508) 583-3977; E-mail: DorryToo@aol.com) for more information. Heritage Plantation in Sandwich offers a spectacular display of mature plants which bloom in late May and early June. Grigas keeps on top of his school work, too. He was recently inducted into the National Honor Society for his school-oriented enthusiasm. Grigas is also a member of the Silver Lake High School debate team, which demands a lot of his time—including several consecutive Saturdays during the school year.

And while he's only a junior, Grigas is already looking ahead to higher education and beyond.

"I don't have any particular college picked out or anything yet," he said. "But I know that I want to be an actor, and that's really my main career choice. Doing the magic shows helped me with performing on stage, and I think I will be able to interweave the magic with acting."

Grigas' mother Deborah says she is very proud of her son for doing all he does for the community, and keeping sharp in school at the same time.

"I sometimes marvel at how he's able to do it," she said. "But what fascinates me most is how he's able to use his performing ability for the benefit of others. It's remarkable. He's a relatively quiet kid, but when he gets up on stage, his personality comes alive."

Silver Lake Regional High School Principal Richard Kelley said he is also impressed by Grigas and his good works.

"He's an outstanding young man," Kelley said. "He's a good student, and he displays a great deal of kindness and consideration for other people. But he doesn't do the things he does in his community for notoriety. He does it because he feels what he's doing is right."

But Grigas said it's no big deal, after all, community service is just something in which he loves to take part.

"What I do for the community is not boring, and it's not hard labor," he said. "A lot of people usually think of community service as being that way. But what I think more people should be doing is getting out there, finding what they're interested in, and using those interests to help people. It's not a hard thing to do."

Astral week By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, APRIL 26

Get an early start to this day. The green light for new starts is on until 9:22 a.m., when the Gemini moon aligns with Jupiter. This is the first favorable period for launching new enterprises since the new moon occurred. There is a rough spot in effect between 11:26 a.m.-2:26 p.m., when the Gemini moon opposes Pluto. Choose your words carefully. Think before you say or do something you will later regret. This potentially difficult influence passes over quickly, and the remainder of the afternoon and evening rates high across the board.

FRIDAY, APRIL 27

Gear up for a hectic morning. The Gemini moon opposes Mars at 12:12 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Stay alert and use common sense. Influences turn around at 3:49 p.m., when the moon enters domestic Cancer. A lunar alignment to Venus makes this an evening to share a special dinner with friends and loved ones. Get extra rest tonight. Pay attention to your dreams.

SATURDAY, APRIL 28

The combination of a Cancer moon and sun/Neptune alignment makes this day ideal for catching up on rest and relaxation. Pursue favorite leisure activities; meditate, listen to music, take a long walk. Get in touch with what is important and meaningful in your life. Be more nurturing; give extra time and attention to children and pets. The Cancer moon becomes inactive at 5:53 p.m. The sun forms a 90-degree contact to Neptune at 7:50 p.m.

SUNDAY, APRIL 29

An inactive Cancer moon sets the stage for a laidback day. Renew your spirit through time spent in solitude, meditation, art or nature. Fun and games are back in the picture at 7:25 p.m., when the moon enters playful Leo. Visit or entertain friends. Forget your troubles and enjoy life to the fullest.

MONDAY, APRIL 30

It may take a while for the morning fog to burn off. A lunar opposition to Neptune occurs at 10:19 a.m. Others may be distracted, careless, forgetful. Things may not go as planned. The good news is that the green light for new starts is on between 11:20 a.m-6:20 p.m. This period is prime for new beginnings of all kinds, in your business or personal life. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 1:08 p.m. A full moon is building and will culminate May 7.

TUESDAY, MAY 1

May promises to be an action-packed month. The planet Mars travels in retrograde motion May 11 to July 19. If you are planning to get new projects off the ground this spring, now is the time. Take advantage of favorable planetary aspects that are in effect today. The best period occurs between 2:00-7:43 p.m., when the Leo moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. At 10:16 p.m. the moon enters Virgo and aligns with Saturn in the early morning hours. Sidestep worries, fears, irritability. Meditate for inner peace.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 2

The moon travels in Virgo. Mercury, the planetary ruler of Virgo, prepares to align with unpredictable Uranus. Stay busy with practical projects. Handle routine chores and errands; go on a cleanup campaign. The evening may be particularly challenging, when the moon aligns with Pluto. Let go of situations that are out of your control. Pray, meditate, contemplate. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

THURSDAY, MAY 3

Mercury forms a 90-degree contact to Uranus at 6:42 a.m., making for a hectic start to this day. Allow extra time. There are likely to be unexpected delays, obstacles, distractions. The Virgo moon prompts you to stay busy with projects that need redoing, cleaning up, reorganization. Zero in on physical fitness, diets, self-improvement programs. The Virgo moon aligns with Mars at 10:39 p.m. and becomes inactive. This may be a stressful period. Slow down.

Former state senator to lead runway fight

Cohasset native to take on Massport

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cohasset native and former state senator William Golden has taken up the gauntlet in the fight to stop the proposed new Logan International Airport runway.

According to Golden — a Braintree attorney who sued to force the cleanup of Boston Harbor — Massport estimates that flights over Hingham, Hull and Cohasset will leap from 28,000 per year to about 100,000 by 2010 with the new landing strip.

"This project is a hoax and I use that absolutely meaning lie," said Golden, 53. "It does not deliver what it says it will deliver. There will be no reduction in flight delays."

Golden explained that at 5,000 feet, the proposed runway, designed 27 years ago when it was first proposed, is too short for nearly all of today's aircraft. The turbo props being considered for the runway are rapidly being replaced by regional jets that can't land there because of its length, he said. The only class of aircraft that could use the runway is small planes and private jets.

"This project is a hoax and I use that absolutely meaning lie."
— William Golden, attorney

"Massport is pushing a $300 million project so corporate executives can land in peak hours," he said.

Due to sensitivity to turbulence, smaller planes take up more space on runways, because more space has to be to allowed between taxiing planes. By diverting those small planes to the new runway, Massport could fit more planes on other runways – increasing Logan's capacity and sending more flights over the South Shore.

Golden claims that with more capacity – Logan travelers will experience increased delays due to increased congestion.

Hingham, Hull and Cohasset joined forces this spring with each appropriating $30,000 at their respective town meetings to pay consulting and legal costs in the runway battle — because they fear increased jet noise and emissions from the Logan expansion.

Golden called the new runway part of a "turf war" between Massport and the regional airports, saying Logan officials are fearful of losing passengers. Massport estimates that eight of every 10 new passengers uses regional airports.

The camera crew filming a new Disney movie makes its way along Highland Avenue as young extras romp on the common. Along N. Main Street is a line of 70s-vintage cars in a funeral procession.

Disney comes to Cohasset

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Common was sent back in time yesterday when Disney came to town to film a scene for its upcoming movie, "Baby's in Black."

Scores of extras battled 90-degree heat and their heavy, 70s-vintage wardrobe, as filmmakers shot a funeral procession slowly moving up North Main Street, past the common and First Parish Church.

The movie, which stars Academy Award winning actors Dustin Hoffman and Susan Sarandon, has been shot mainly in Gloucester and Marblehead, but came down to Cohasset for a one-day shoot. Neither Hoffman or Sarandon made the trip down.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said he was told the movie's director, Brad Silberling (who directed "Casper"), insisted on using the Cohasset scene in the movie. "The director loves Cohasset," he said. "And can you blame him?...I've never seen the common looking better. The church is newly painted, the new flagpole is up, and the grass is bright green."

Film Publicist Eileen Peterson said the movie wanted to capture the changing of the seasons, and that's one of the reasons Disney picked New England in April.

"It's really cool. I'm kind of glued to the window."
— Joyce Davis, spectator

Of course, the New England weather failed to cooperate. Because of the movie's early-spring setting, part of the film crew spent more than half an hour shoveling snow off a flatbed truck and spread it along the edge of the common, as extras, dressed in woolen clothes, sweated out the wait.

Merchants want to curb one-way trial

"All we wanted was some was some new sidewalks, lights and trees."
— Anne Gabanelle, French Memories

"I know how the traffic works better than anyone else," he said. "If they want to make it better, they should leave it alone."

Roukounakis is talking about the selectmen's potential decision to try a one-way traffic loop pattern through the village. The town Village Revitalization Task Force recommended the plan, derived as part of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's ongoing village improvement effort, to selectmen at their meeting last week.. Tuesday, the board will take a final vote on whether to give the go-ahead for a trial period.

"This could bring a lot of potential benefits to the area," said Dean Rizzo, executive director of the CRC, which sponsored the village traffic study and analysis. "It's only a tryout to see if it works or it does-

Town has number of historic notables

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Though lacking the national recognition of Plymouth Rock or the sheer density of historic buildings in Hingham Square — Cohasset does boast a number of nationally recognized historic landmarks.

Four properties within the town's borders have a place on the National Register of Historic Places and are protected by the U.S. Department of the Interior – Cohasset Common Historic District, Government Island, the Caleb Lothrop House on Summer Street, and the Walter Gropius House on Atlantic Avenue.

The most recognizable of the sites is Cohasset Common, made famous through photographs, paintings, and two Hollywood movies, not including Walt Disney's "Baby's in Black," which filmed a scene there yesterday.

"It's a classic New England town common," said Town Archivist David Wadsworth, who is also the curator for the Cohasset Historical Society. Standing in the middle of the common is the First Parish Church, the old town meeting house. The current structure was erected in 1747, just north of the original building.

Charlie McCarthy of McCarthy Flagpole helps assemble the pole joint on Tuesday when the new fiberglass pole went up.

Flagpole is back on the green

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A new 80-foot fiberglass flagpole was installed Tuesday afternoon on the Town Common.

Its predecessor that was put up about four years ago broke off about four feet about the base during a blizzard in March.

That pole, which was covered under a 10-year warranty, replaced a wooden one that was taken down because it was rotting and had stood there for decades.

Building inspector Bob Egan said the new pole is reinforced at the "weak spot" near where the door to the halyard is located.

"I could see what happened," Egan said. There is a reinforcing sleeve or shim inside that is smaller in diameter than the pole near the "weak spot" that wasn't firmly attached, he said.

"Over the years due to the vibration, it broke loose and slipped down leaving the weak spot exposed," he said.

Nancy St. John of Eagle Flag Company in North Weymouth that obtained both poles for the town said the manufacturer used a new epoxy and bolts in the new pole to secure the shim that lends support to that area.

Eagle Flag also "golf-leafed" the ball at the top of the new pole at no charge, St. John said.

PLP Composite Technologies of New Hampshire manufactured the poles.

The fiberglass pole should be able to sustain winds of up to 120 mph, according to the company brochure, far more than the 45 mph gusts in the March nor'easter. The pole broke off, struck some wires on the way down sending an electrical surge that flickered lights in the village, and broke again. No one was injured in the mishap.

Egan said it wasn't anticipating any problems with the new pole.

Contracts inked for restoration of tank

The Water Department recently signed contracts for restoration of the Bear Hill water storage tank.

"Restoration of the Bear Hill tank will begin very soon," said Water Commission chairman John McNabb.

The contract for reconstruction of the access road to the Bear Hill tank was recently awarded to Gioiso Construction, which has been working on a number of Water Department projects recently. This work has already begin, said McNabb.

Amstar of West Seneca, New York, was awarded the contract, for $309,000, to clean, inspect, and paint the Bear Hill tank. This work should start in a few weeks and be completed about 60 days later.

"We expect to repaint the Bear Hill tank with the same color paint as the new Scituate Hill tank, said McNabb, "which will make the tank less obtrusive. The cleaning of the Bear Hill tank, to remove seven feet of accumulated alum sludge, will help improve water quality."

Correction

A story about lots off Beach Street that appeared in last week's Cohasset Mariner warrants some clarification. The Mariner reported public access to Brewster Woods was through the path in the back of the Town Hall parking lot. That land is actually private property belonging to Ellen Morrissey. She said at one time an agreement existed with the Cohasset Conservation Trust, which owns Brewster Woods, to provide access to the land. However, that agreement has since been dropped.

Also, Morrissey says that no blasting of the granite ledge off Beach Street occurred when she built the house on top of the ledge a number of years ago.

Kimball's manager

Selectmen approved a change of manager on the Kimball's By the Sea's liquor license. Joseph Campbell, also the manager of Atlantica Restaurant, recently replaced long-time Kimball's manager Jane McCombs.

Redistricting

Town Clerk Marion Douglas told selectmen this week that the town will not have to draw new precinct lines, as a result of the 2000 Census.

If the town's population had changed more than 5 percent, the town would have been required to change the precinct lines. The town's two precinct's are currently divided down the middle of North and South Main streets.

County marker

The town will hire a surveyor to reset a Norfolk County property marker on Ripley Road that was buried two years ago during James Brook flood control work.

The town was notified at the April 10 meeting by Carousel Antiques owner Amanda Burgoon that the marker at the edge of her property had been buried and never restored.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the work will cost about $300.

House budget scraps $44K in town school aid money

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset stands to lose $44,000 in Chapter 70 money if the House version of the budget passes in the Legislature.

Overall, the House budget calls for $35 million more in state aid to communities and school districts than what is included in the governor's budget. However, 160 communities fare better in the budget submitted by former Governor Paul Cellucci, including most South Shore towns.

But state Rep. Garrett Bradley has signed onto two bills; one that would increase the House state aid numbers to match the governor's numbers, and another to revamp the funding formula.

Cellucci's budget would send $1,434,077 in Chapter 70 money to the town to offset education expenses, but the House plan allocates just $1,389,245 — a difference of $44,832. Cohasset received $1,327,934 in Chapter 70 money this year.

. Although the difference makes up less than 1 percent of the town's expected revenue, it still throws a wrench in the town's balanced budget. Cohasset's fiscal year 2002 budget was prepared using the governor's budget numbers, traditionally the lowest of the state aid numbers. If the House's version of the budget passes, the town budget would be off by the reduced amount.

"I'm really annoyed by this," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "How can we be expected to plan a budget when they play these games?"

He said if he knew the House numbers were going to be lower, he probably would've recommended a slightly larger override than the $300,000 the town approved last month. "Now it's too late and it will be out of balance," he said.

Hingham is another town that would fare better under the governor's plan. That town would receive $3,948,107 in Chapter 70 money under Cellucci's budget, and just $3,779,059 under the House budget.

Haddad said the House's complex distribution formula favored cities and less-affluent areas this year such as Brockton, Lowell, and Worcester. Besides Cohasset and Hingham — Duxbury, Norwell, Kingston, Abington, Scituate, Holbrook and Pembroke would also see reductions in state aid in the House budget. South Shore towns such as Hanover, Braintree, Marshfield and Rockland would fare better under the House budget.

Haddad said since the town isn't overly dependent on state aid — it makes up less than 8 percent of the town's total revenue — it wouldn't have to do anything drastic if the House version passes, such as lay off teachers.

Schools Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey was optimistic the House numbers would change. "Not only do the state school superintendents favor the higher level, but so do the state school committees," he said. "Recently, the state school committees had a lobbying day on Beacon Hill and brought that message forward. Hopefully it will not only be brought to the higher level, but increased."

Malvey said Cohasset is, and has been, the victim of an assumption that it doesn't need state aid. "We don't want to be left out of the loop. We may appear to have the resources, but it's still a tremendous draw on the tax base, because there is not a lot of industry in town," he said.

The school budget takes up nearly half of the town's $25 million operating budget. Chapter 70 money doesn't go directly to the schools. It is instead sent into the town's general fund, and is used to offset school expenses and help keep the tax rate down.

State Rep. David Linsky, D-Natick, filed a budget amendment last week that would "correct small inequities in the Chapter 70 distributions." Bradley has signed on as a co-sponsor for the amendment, which would bump up the House numbers to at least match the governor's. He said recent changes to the current distribution formula has made a "bad formula worse."

"It hurts towns like Hingham and Cohasset, and puts the burden on them," he said. "It's not an equitable split."

Bradley is co-sponsoring another bill with Linsky that would reform the distribution formula so that each town or school district could count on receiving $125 in Chapter 70 money per student. The Legislature would then have the option to appropriate that number, or some other higher number recommended by the governor or House Ways and Means Committee.

"It's a floor so that when communities set their budget figures, they will not have to adjust them," he explained.

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said if history is a precedent, "the Senate formula has been more advantageous" than either the House or governor's formulas in the past few years. However, Hedlund said the Senate's budget is still a work in progress and probably won't be released until after Memorial Day.

Every year, the governor's office submits a budget to the House for approval. The House Ways and Means Committee than creates its own budget. The Senate later files another budget. Later this spring, after the House and Senate have passed their respective budgets, a budget conference committee will meet to hammer out the differences. In theory, this is supposed to be done by the end of the fiscal year on June 30. Lately, however, it has become common for budget discussions to drag on long past the start of the new fiscal year. In 1999, the state budget finally passed in November.

Wolf Pits taking vote possible

Water commission meets Monday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Water Commission will hold a special meeting Monday night at 8 p.m. to consider taking the Beechwood Street property known as the "Wolf Pits" by eminent domain.

Town voters authorized the commission to take the land at the annual Town Meeting, March 31.

Commission Chairman John McNabb said because he had to give the property's owners 30 days notice, "May 7 is the earliest date for us to consider taking the property."

The property is owned by developer Wayne Sawchuk and Leland and Leonora Jenkins of Jerusalem Road under the name Wolf Woods Nominee Trust.

Town boards are concerned that any development on the land, which is located near the Aaron Reservoir and in the Lily Pond watershed, would harm the town's water supply.

The Town Meeting article authorized the commission to take the property for $150,000. However some were worried the price would become inflated if Sawchuk and the trust received approval to build upon the property. When land is taken by eminent domain, the town is locked in to paying fair market value for that land, as determined by a land court judge.

However, the Planning Board recently denied a preliminary subdivision plan for the site.

A preliminary subdivision plan is a rough sketch of a proposed development that has the board identify to the applicant any problems with the project, before he spends the time and money coming up with detailed final design plans.

Sawchuk's plan called for 11 single family lots, a common drainage plan, and a common septic system.

Although the plan met all zoning requirements, Planning Board Chairman Al Moore said the plan "was like putting 20 pounds of potatoes in a 10 pound sack. It seemed like an overwhelming project for the land it was being asked to support."

"May 7 is the earliest date for us to consider taking the property."
— John McNabb, Water Commission chairman

Town bylaws require 4.54 acres for a subdivision of that size. Sawchuk's plan had 6.72 acres.

On March 12, the Board of Health voted to disapprove the shared septic system because of its potential location within the flood plain.

Town Planner Liz Harrington also said there were concerns about access to the property, especially in the case of an emergency. "There were general concerns with access in an emergency situations, or flooding in the area and getting people in and out," she said.

Moore added, "We felt in every case the information provided was inadequate to make a decision."

The formal decision cites 11 problems with the preliminary plan, ranging from unclear delineation of the floodplain lines and water protection district, to the disturbance of wetlands for the utility easement.

It also said Sawchuk hadn't provided enough information in response to allegations made by the water commission that the project would cause increased nitrate and other chemical levels in the town water supply.

The vote against the plan was unanimous, 4-0. New board member Peter Pratt abstained from voting on the recommendation of town counsel because he had not been part of the board when the hearing had started.

Until the commission votes to seize the land, Sawchuk can resubmit a building plan before the board.

Property abutter Agnes McCann of Doane Street, said she has recently seen heavy equipment clearing land out on the property. "He's clearing it, even though the town voted that it wants to take it," she said. "I'm dumb with amazement because he's ruining it...I don't know the benefit of what he's trying to do."

The Mariner was unable to get in touch with Sawchuk for comment.

Noble is new school board chief

Plans to keep meetings to the point

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Committee named Stephanie Noble its new chairman, during its annual board reorganization last week.

Noble, who is entering the final year of her first-term on the board, said she doesn't expect much to change from the way the meetings have been run in the past.

"I don't believe you'll see a big difference between the way Mark DeGiacomo, and Pat Martin ran their meetings, and how I do," she said.

Noble said the committee is in the process of putting together a brochure for town residents to get more familiar with the board. "It will be how to get their concerns across, how to get in touch with us, and how to become a part of the school committee work, when they feel the need to do so."

Outgoing chairman Martin praised the new chairman. "She's committed, experienced, extremely bright, and hard working. She'll make an excellent chairman."

The one aspect Noble hopes to work on is the pace of school committee meetings.

"There used to be a sign in Talbot's that was a quote from an old Hollywood producer that said, 'If you can't fit your idea on the back of a calling card, you don't have an idea.' We certainly do want people to get their points across but in a clear, succinct manner," Noble said.

Although she doesn't mind spending the time if there's a lot of material to cover and wants to give everyone a chance to express their concerns — "meetings can get a bit too long sometimes," she said.

Noble said she ran in 1999 with no experience on a school board, and so far her time on the committee "has been a learning experience."

She said the school committee will prepare its goals and objectives for the year at a meeting later this month.

Noble, a Joy Place resident, has three daughters; one in the ninth grade, one in third grade and one in kindergarten.

Also, the committee named Rick Flynn vice-chairman, and Chartis Tebbetts secretary.

Both Martin and DeGiacomo were re-elected to the committee in this spring's Town Election. Martin defeated challenger Adrienne MacCarthy, who called for a recount that narrowed Martin's margin of victory from three votes to two.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

ENJOYING SPRING

Hello Cohasset. How is everyone enjoying the weather?

I am seeing more and more of the beautiful flowers around town, you all do such a great job with them. As we are all getting into this hectic and busy season of spring between soccer, baseball, lacrosse, Graduations, first communion etc, it is very important for all to take a breath here and there and make sure to "smell the roses" as they say. I cannot believe that the school year is coming to an end one more time so quickly. It seems like we were just getting ready for the holidays and now, I am putting all of that stuff away and looking for the summer clothes. Where does time go?

SPECIAL DAY

On April 22, 2001, a surprise 50th wedding anniversary party was given for Barbara and Carmelo Conte by their daughter Linda, her husband Al, their son John and his wife Joni. It was held at John and Joni Conte's home, where Jenna and Jack, their grandchildren and many guests attended. A wonderful time was had by everyone. Family arrived from New Hampshire, Cape Cod and as far away as England. What a great tribute to a wonderful couple. Congratulations.

MANY GENERATIONS

Christine M. Curley of 60 Elm St., who will celebrate her 96th birthday on May 4, (Happy Birthday!), recently attended her great-, great-granddaughter's christening at St. Thecla's Church in Pembroke. Madison is also the great-grandniece of Ben Curley of Cohasset. Congratulations to all on both these wonderful events.

BABY GIRL

Another new baby to talk about is Charlotte Carr Purdy. Charlotte was born on April 13, 2001and is the new daughter of Edward and Amy Purdy of Pleasant Street. Charlotte weighed in at 8 lbs., 1 oz. and was 20-1/2 inches long. She joins her big brother Nathaniel at home and is receiving all kinds of love and attention, I am sure. Charlottes grandparents are of Newton and Diane Purdy of Cranford, N.J. Congratulations on that wonderful baby girl.

TRIP TO ITALY

Boy oh boy, do the staff at Roger Pompeo's Cohasset office know how to travel. Recently, the staff were treated to a Roman Holiday hosted by Dr. Pompeo and his wife Ann for a week's holiday in Italy. I hope that all of you had a great time on this amazing trip.

A trek through history

Signs of spring are everywhere. Tulips stretch their stems to capture the radiant sunshine, beach-goers are trekking to their favorite South Shore waterfront and the sounds of lawn mowers and leaf blowers break the silence along our main streets and back roads.

People are beginning their traditional rituals to usher in yet another spring and summer on the South Shore. Residents are busting out of their winter doldrums to experience all that make this a wonderful place to live and work.

This year we encourage residents to enjoy all that the South Shore has to offer — especially savoring the historic landmarks and locations linking us to our past. When compiling your to-do list of day trips you should definitely add one or two stops at the many unique historic sites on the South Shore.

In this area, a worthwhile trip can be planned in the blink of an eye; there are many educational and entertaining historic structures rich in heritage and preserved thanks to the foresight of many individuals.

This week's issue of the paper focuses on historical landmarks and districts for two reasons — to get people who live in the area to further appreciate what is in their collective backyards, and also to highlight a few reasons why some of these places are so special.

Of course, it was not easy to pick which structures and places to highlight, because the South Shore has hundreds of them, from Plymouth all the way to Quincy and beyond. Sure, the area offers a number of exciting museums to take in lessons of history, but if you really think about it, the South Shore is a museum in itself.

Historic sites bring us all back to a simpler time when horse and carriages served as the main form of transportation, when people knew how to reap the most off their plots of land, and when a sporting event meant hosting a vegetable-growing competition.

Having a better understanding of history helps to comprehend the lives of the people who set up this great nation, and like the saying goes, those who don't understand past mistakes and failures are doomed to repeat them.

But enriching oneself on the past also gives a person the opportunity to say "I live here, and I understand where I come from."

Shouldn't that be everyone's responsibility to themselves?

One-way trial

In the face of rising opposition, we hope selectmen will have the courage at their meeting Tuesday to give the go-ahead to a one-way traffic pattern trial in the village. That doesn't mean they are endorsing the plan. The fact is, we may never know if a one-way village loop would work if we don't give it a test run. It might wreak havoc and negatively impact village businesses. We don't think selectmen want to see anything but a positive impact on the business climate in town.

But a one-way solution to some of the traffic and parking problems has been bandied about for at least a decade. Let's approach it with an open mind and give it a test run. And then if the plan flops, the issue can come off the table once and for all.

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley on clean elections

Rep. Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) co-sponsored an amendment that would finance the Clean Election Law. The House of Representatives Committee on Ways and Means budget being debated this week did not include the appropriations to the Clean Elections Fund. The advocates of the law have stated that $10 million is needed in this budget to implement the law next year.

The Clean Elections Law was approved by a two-thirds majority of the voters in 1998. It is a voluntary program that provides public money to those candidates that agree to spending limits.

"I made a commitment in my campaign last year to vote against attempts to gut this law. Certainly not funding it is an attempt to kill this law and I believe that is wrong," Bradley said.

No one-way trial

TO THE EDITOR:

We've been betrayed. Yes, we the people, and especially the merchants of South Main Street. At every meeting of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) we were assured that nothing would happen unless it met with Town Meeting approval. But now CRC has gone to the selectmen, instead of the people, for approval of trial one-way streets.

(Yes, at a small meeting of representatives from non-profit organizations I did vote in favor of such a trial; but I was voting as an individual and was not representing the town. In so voting I assumed the issue would be brought before Town Meeting. It wasn't.)

The people of this town, and especially the affected merchants, were not informed that the selectmen would be considering this trial. The selectmen should rescind their vote on this issue. Trials have a way of becoming permanent.

Traffic flow

TO THE EDITOR:

How dare the selectmen and the Village Revitalization Task Force make such a big decision on such an important subject without talking to the merchants and people of this town. Since these businesses are our lives, it amounts to playing with our lives without consulting us.

At the last public meeting of CRC, the vast majority in attendance were not in favor of one-way streets in the village. Apparently CRC did not take into account this expressed, public opinion.

Why are we allowing CRC and its consultants, who have no businesses here and don't live here, to tell us what sort of traffic pattern we should have. It doesn't make sense. After 29 years here, in the same location, I know more about the traffic flow here than any outside consultant.

On Tuesday, April 24, Dean Rizzo was down in the village talking to the merchants about his traffic survey conducted earlier. He never mentioned that a one-way street trial was being submitted to a vote of the selectmen that evening. Thus none of us were present at the meeting to raise our voices on this subject.

Road race thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

As the founder and co-director of the Cohasset RoadRace By-The-Sea I would like to say thank you to the many organizations, individuals, and businesses who worked on and supported the 25th running of the race this year. It is hard to imagine that this race was first run in 1977. The sponsor of the race is the Cohasset Rotary Club. This organization is a wonder in itself. It is a rather small group of men and women, around 20, who work quietly and do so much good. Your support of the race helps this wonderful organization spread good deeds throughout the world. Rotarians worked hard on the race this year and we had a wonderful day because of their efforts.

I would also like to thank Sharpless Jones and Frannie Coffee for their efforts with the race. These two gentlemen have come out year after year and supported and promoted the Cohasset Road Race. We have many other people like Rick Curtis who works on getting prizes for the race. He has done this for years. Ronnie Goodwin who does the shirts that so many of you have. When I first started giving out T-shirts I was at Ronnie's garage early, very early, on the morning of the race getting shirts. A special thanks to the Town of Cohasset departments who help prepare the roadways for the race. In 1978 the Highway Department made sure that the runners would be able to get over the washed out causeway on Atlantic Avenue. We have had voluntary medical professionals on hand every year. Dr. Pompeo, Dr. Golden my wife Judith, our Town Nurse, who have been there every year. Many others have come out to help and some we don't even know about who live along the race route and every year they are there to support the runners.

The race has become a Town event not only are many of the participants from the Town but the businesses, individuals and Town Departments who support the race give it a feeling of doing something good. I must say a special thank you to the runners who have come out year after year and supported this race. Jack Bowen said to me at this year's registration that he was just a little kid when he started running and he thought that I was old then (nice guy). We all laughed at that comment. We pay special attention to the runners in the race and they have come back to support this event every year.

Thank You to all the participants, helpers and supporters of the race and the fans of the race who stand by the sides of the road and cheer on the runners. You have really made this event a dream come true.

Don't make a Swift judgment

MY VIEW

RICK COLLINS

It's been three weeks since Paul Cellucci left the State House in the hands of Jane Swift, and things continue on as they always have.

There hasn't been a mass exodus of scared and frightened residents fleeing to one of the lesser 49 states. England has not tried to re-capture Boston Harbor. And the U.S.-Canadian hockey puck and beaver pelt trade has never been stronger. And now a Boston Herald popularity poll says her disapproval rating has dropped 29 points over the past two months.

So what's going on? Wasn't the Jane Swift Era supposed to be a joke to start, a folly in the middle and a disaster in the end? After all, it was about six months ago that Swift's approval ratings were so low that even Jack E. Robinson was sending her sympathy cards.

Now as Acting-Governor, Jane Swift has not put the state in a tailspin and the Herald has been forced to call off the attack dogs, and give her some legitimate coverage.

Comments made last week by the area's elected officials, state Sen. Robert Hedlund, and state Rep Garrett Bradley provide insight into this "turnaround." Both called attention to Swift's intelligence. And Bradley who, as a Democrat, wouldn't have much to lose by taking a couple of cheap shots like calling her Air Swift.

Intelligence and ethics are not the same creatures. Sure she screwed up by using a State Police helicopter to fly over Thanksgiving weekend traffic on the Mass. Turnpike, and using staffers to baby-sit her daughter. But that doesn't mean she isn't smart and can't be effective.

I had the privilege of talking to House Speaker Thomas Finneran at a recent Mariner-sponsored event honoring Mary Jeanette Murray, and I think his caveat speaks volumes: Don't underestimate her.

Mistah Speakah said the worst thing his party could do would be to allow Swift to take advantage of low expectations, a la George W. Bush. He said all it would take is for Swift to hit homeruns on a couple of issues, surprise a few people, and — voila —become a successful governor.

And know what? She's got her batting gloves on and is taking some big swings.

Two weeks ago Swift announced she'd fight to restore state funding of the widely-supported Clean Elections Law, which Finneran cut as part of the House budget. And guess whose side Senate President Thomas Birmingham is on?

Last week, she announced new carbon dioxide emission guidelines for the five coal and oil burning power plants in Massachusetts. Whose going to come out and argue the guidelines are unnecessary and that carbon dioxide emissions are OK??

And this past week she broke with her predecessor and said mothers on welfare would be able to count hours spent in job training or the classroom would count towards their required work hours.

Those may not be homeruns, but they're at least long drives to the warning track — perhaps a couple to The Wall.

I certainly don't mean to make a strong case for Swift – in fact, I can't wait to cast my vote for Warren Tolman, or Marty Meehan or some other Democrat next fall. So this is more of a warning – make her earn any success. Remember, if Swift wins reelection, the corner office will be held by a Republican for 16 years when the term expires in 2006.

A library that will sing!

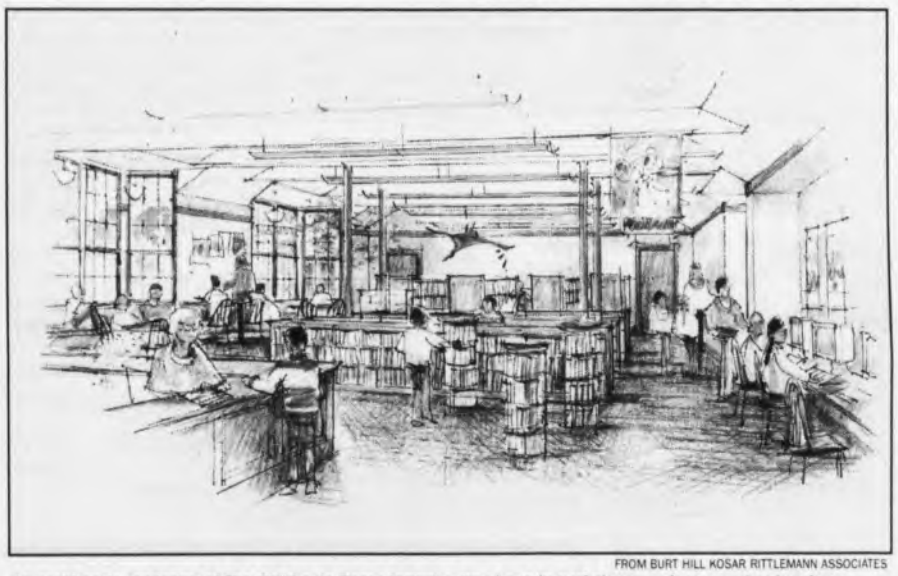
By Patience Towle and Sheila Evans
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

This week or next, every Cohasset household will be receiving a mail solicitation for a gift to the Cohasset Library Building Fund. The goal for this Campaign is at least $300,000! This amount, when combined with the $800,000 that has already been pledged, a Massachusetts Library Construction Grant, and sale of the existing library building when it becomes vacant, will meet the entire cost of a new Cohasset library. What will Cohasset be getting for all this money?

In sum, a beautiful, warm and welcoming new library on one floor, with almost double the space the library now has, and ample parking. It will be incorporating as well some of the best of our well-loved old library:

- the name, Paul Pratt Memorial Library
- the wonderful and helpful library staff
- the excellent book collection
- the handsome mackerel weathervane that notes Cohasset's importance as a mackerel fishing center in the 19th century and
- reproductions of the MacIvor Reddie murals now in the Rotunda, given Cohasset by Charlotte Tower, its longtime Librarian. The Friends of the Cohasset Library have undertaken this important project.

FROM BURT HILL KOSAR RITTLEMANN ASSOCIATES



The Reading Room was the former gym and auditorium of the original school, with a very high, vaulted ceiling and tall palladium windows.

This new library is going to sing! Let's take a little tour … As you enter the main door from the parking lot, you pass through an entrance hall with the Meeting Room on your right. Once you enter the library proper, you will immediately see and understand the layout of the library. (Probably at least half of you will say or think, "Wow!") Looking straight ahead, you will see the Circulation Desk and a large open area under a handsome Rotunda in which New Books and Audio-Visual materials will be displayed.

—COMMENTARY—

The Children's Room will be on your left, with two large bay windows, and a separate story hour room, with a sink, that will permit more extensive children's programs. Moving clockwise, a Young Adults Room is next. This room will be geared to fifth to ninth graders and their taste in books, audiovisual materials and décor.

Beyond the open area under the Rotunda and a little to the left will be the dramatic Reading Room. This was the former gym and auditorium of the original school, with a very high, vaulted ceiling and tall palladium windows. Some older Cohasset residents will remember attending Town Meetings in this space, and a few former students now in their 30s will remember a huge open space classroom for four first grades there. The palladium windows are beautiful features of the room that will house the reference collection, 12 computer carrels for public access to the internet, and many study tables with outlets for laptops. Floor to ceiling columns will define this area which on the north and east side will be flanked by the adult book collection. In the far left corner of the library, beycnd the Reading Room will be the Newspaper and Periodical Room. With comfortable seating and many windows, this area will feel like a nice living-room, and will undoubtedly be a popular, quiet retreat for many.

FROM BURT HILL KOSAR RITTLEMANN ASSOCIATES

An architect's rendering of The Children's Room featuring two large bay windows, and a separate story hour room, with a sink, that will permit more extensive children's programs.

There will be two small study rooms, available on a sign-up basis, for four to six persons, with a table and chairs, outlets for laptops and a chalkboard. Both students doing group projects and adults having meetings will appreciate these spaces. Further, there will be a larger room with a conference table for meetings of up to 14 people, also available by sign-up, which the Library Trustees, the Board of the Friends, and others will find useful. This room will also store and display the library's small collection of Cohasset historical and genealogical materials.

There will be a waiting room near the Ripley Road entrance with a free local telephone in which children may call for a ride home and a bench upon which to wait. An external book drop will also be near this entrance for the convenience of patrons returning books at any time.

Finally, behind the scenes at the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library will be carefully designed, efficient and pleasant work areas for the staff and the Library Director, as well as a Staff Lounge — all of which will insure the optimal running of this new Cohasset gem.

The Library Trustees and the Cohasset Library Building Fund Committee invite everyone in Cohasset to become a part of this exciting project by responding to the mail solicitation for gifts to the Building Fund. The appeal has been mailed and should be received this week or next. The names of donors of $1,000 or more will be permanently listed on a Donor Wall in the new library, and all names will be listed in a final Campaign Report. Gifts may be pledged and paid in three payments over three years.

Library trustees Patience Towle and Sheila Evans are also chairman and secretary, respectively, of the Cohasset Library Building Fund.

It's called government

Did you ever get the feeling that things are closing in on you? A shrink would say it is not so and call it "paranoia." I say it is so and growing and I call it "government."

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The Randolph Town Meeting last week voted a new bylaw that, once it is approved by the Attorney General, would forbid homeowners from paving over their lawns for parking like they do in other communities.

"That is not what the town of Randolph is," said Selectmen Chairman James Burgess. In other words, if you want to live in Randolph, by golly, you'll conform just like the rest of us.

Attitudes like that have cost office-holders the next election.

"There is nothing more demoralizing to someone who keeps his property up than to have someone move in next door and start parking on the lawn," said Town Meeting Member Michael Cronin.

Furthermore, the bylaw requires that "all grass areas be mowed on a regular basis." Presumably, the next step will be the appointment of a Commissioner of Lawns to tour the town on a regular basis with a slide rule to measure the length of the grass.

Meanwhile, the Virginia State Senate kept the paranoia alive by approving a bill that would allow Fairfax County, where three-bedroom apartments go for $1,181 a month, to prohibit residents from sleeping in rooms other than a bedroom in their own homes.

"Jamming 20 people into a two-bedroom house diminishes property values, takes up parking spaces, and robs neighbors of peace and quiet," said Sen. Leslie Byrne, sponsor of the bill.

"What they do in their actual bedrooms, I don't care," Byrne added graciously.

Not even Fairfax County, which is an "affluent suburb" of Washington, as the Globe would say, was quite ready for that one.

"I have a lot of problems with government telling people where they can and cannot sleep," said County Supervisor Gerald Connolly.

Watch it, Gerry! Attitudes like that have cost office-holders the next election.

Have you ever noticed that the smaller the crime (i. e. parking on the lawn and sleeping in the kitchen) tends to encourage lawmakers to place the most draconian laws on the books, all for the public good?

Like Maine State Rep. Joe Brooks' remedy for the cigarette butts that litter the state's pristine landscape.

Joe wants to charge an extra nickel for every filter-tipped cigarette sold in Maine, the charge to be refunded when the used cigarette butt is returned to redemption centers, just like cans and bottles are now.

The last I heard, Joe's bill was on its way out of committee and due to be taken up by the full House, where Joe was looking forward to passage.

There's more and more support for the bill," he reported. "If people will stop giggling long enough, I think it will pass."

And the city of Halifax, Nova Scotia, has banned all perfume from indoor public places like municipal offices, libraries, hospitals, courtrooms, and mass transit buses in the interests of public health.

"We've even got scent-free doughnut shops," gloated Karen Robinson, an anti-scent campaigner.

Cohasset undergoing triennial revaluation

ASSESSMENTS

ELSA MILLER

It is the responsibility of an assessor to value all taxable property within the community by means of "mass appraisal" Mass appraisal is the use of standardized procedures for collecting and appraising property so as to ensure that all properties with the town are valued uniformly and equitable. Assessors may perform this work with their own staff (know as in-house) or they may hire professional appraisal firms. Cohasset will be conducting the residential entire in-house and the commercial with an outside firm and in-house.

Assessments are based on "full and fair cash value". This revaluation will utilize the sales from fiscal year 2000. Assessors analyze what the "willing buyers" and "willing seller" are doing in the real estate market. Supply and demand is the primary driver of values. The Deputy Assessor Cheryl Pooler along with the Assistant Assessor Debbie Krupczak, have been busy collecting, recording and analyzing a great deal of information about property and the market characteristic in order to estimate "fair market value". Some of the influences include mortgage rates, unemployment rates, stock and bond markets. Other external influences are the convenience to shopping, public transportation and new growth within the town. Administrative Assistant Devon Veyo handles the inputting the data and the daily office functions.

Massachusetts Department of Revenue mandates the triennial revaluation. It also reviews and certifies the values. The value estimates generated by this analysis are state mandated to be within 10 percent of 100 percent of fair-market value. The Board has completed a map of the town by marking the sales. We used different colored pins, indicating price ranges, placed on a street map. This helps the Board and Cheryl to identify specific market areas. For instance waterfront and water view, the downtown area, and certain subdivisions are just a few of the areas indicating demand and increased sales prices. Along with print outs of the sales and sales data, patterns start to evolve that indicated change in the values.

The Board comprised of chairman Elsa Miller, Mickey Patrolio, the longest member, and Will Smith, are putting together a public forum meeting. It will be held on May 17 in the Selectman's' office from 7-9 p.m.. It will be on cable in order to reach as many taxpayers as possible. The phone lines will be open for questions. We feel the homeowner should be able to understand their assessment and the process that goes into creating the value. This will be the first of several articles proving information about the process.

Elsa Miller is chairman of the Board of Assessors.

HEALTH NOTES

Some spring tips for using organic lawn care

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO MARINER

Second in a series

If you do your own lawn, the suggestions below should give a healthy lawn without risk to individuals, pets, or naturally occurring beneficial organisms. An organic or natural landscaping program avoids, the use of chemicals and pesticides which are known to harm people, pets, or the environment, replacing them with natural substances which have fewer harmful effects. Natural lawn care also necessitates a different method of turf management.

Mowing: Cut grass at 3 inches using mulching mower. Keep the mower operating properly and the blades sharp. Only remove 1/3 of the grass blade at a time. Leaving grass clippings on your lawn will provide it with 40 percent of the nutrients it needs. Rotate mowing patterns. Cut grass shorter in the late fall for easier cleanup.

Seeding: Plant only as much lawn as you need and only where it will grow well. A diversity of other plants can be used to replace lawn where it is not needed for recreation or view. Such plantings can improve the overall beauty and quality of your property.

When seeding a lawn, use a certified first class grass seed. Carefully choose a grass seed blend that is compatible with the growing conditions.

Seed in early fall with mixture of fescues and ryes, including some entophytic-enhanced grasses (naturally toxic to pests). Caution! Entophytic fungi are toxic to some livestock should not be used where the grasses can be foraged.

Clover provides free nitrogen for your lawn and establishes quickly. Rake soil before seeding to improve germination.

Fertilizing/Soil Building: Apply an organic fertilizer with low nitrogen content in fall and spring.

If available, clean compost should be spread on lawn in the fall after aerating. In hot, dry summer weather, lawns can be sprayed with a liquid seaweed/fish fertilizer to prevent summer brown-out.

Dolomitic limestone can be applied every few years in the fall. Apply lime only based upon soil test recommendations. The ideal pH (acidity) of a lawn is between 6.8 and 7.0. Use no more than 125 lb. of lime per 1000 sq. ft. every 6 months.

Thatch is a mat of dead roots and stems that accumulates at the surface. Excessive thatch is caused by quick-release nitrogen fertilizer, poor mowing and watering habits, and low microbial activity.

Excessive thatch blocks the growth of healthy grass and provides a medium for insect pests to live. If the, layer is thicker than 1/2 inch, it's probably appropriate to renovate in the fall. A liquid de-thatch product may be applied fall and spring to turn thatch into soil building organic matter.

Note: Healthy soil is the key to a beautiful lawn. A simple soil test should be done every few years.

Weed Control: Apply a corn gluten product (organic pre-emergent) early in fall and spring to control crabgrass and other broadleaf weeds.

Insect Control: For grubs, chinch bugs and sod webworms, apply beneficial nematodes. Milky Spore Powder (a species-specific bacteria) can be applied in a grid pattern on the lawn for effective and long-lasting grub control. Both of these biological controls are completely safe for people, pets and beneficial insects.

Watering: Depending on amount of rainfall, water one time weekly for 3-4 hours in each area. Early a.m. is the best time to water. Daily watering is expensive and not helpful for your lawn.

Pesticides kill the beneficial organisms in your soil, and landscapes can become addicted to routine application of synthetic chemicals and may show withdrawal symptoms. It will take some time to re-establish a balance. Stop! 'go cold turkey'. The quickest way for a "junk," lawn to recover is with 2 applications (1/4 inch each) of good quality organic compost. This will naturally control thatch by increasing the number of beneficial organisms in the soil. The sooner you start an organic program, the sooner you will see results. Be patient.

Pesticides: If you must use pesticides for a particularly vexing problem here are some tips taken from an EPA advisory: Read the Label Don't guess! and don't assume that if a little is good; more is better. Buy the right amount for your needs. Remember it's illegal to dispose of excess pesticides in the normal trash collection or landfills. Pay attention to warnings. Use protective clothing. Understand when and how to apply the .product and when it is safe for people or pets to re areas.

Remember, your property is your most important environmental concern; pay attention to it and care for it. For more information contact the Board of Health or the Conservation Commission

Martin says thanks

TO THE EDITOR:

With the election and recount now both officially over, I would like to thank the community for one again electing me to the Cohasset school committee for another three years. It is my privilege and deep honor to serve on your behalf and I am grateful for the opportunity. I am looking forward to meeting the challenges that lie before us and continuing to provide the town of Cohasset with one of the finest school districts in the commonwealth.

I wish to also thank the many fine people who worked so hard on my behalf throughout my campaign. Headed up by my campaign chairperson Catherine Davis, these people include Karen Oronte, Melissa Grasz, Janyce Brown, Andrea Kinneally, Bill and Susan Bell, Rich and Kathy Ofsthun, Joan Busk, Joan Allen, Jeff and Lisa Pratt, Jim and Derry Schwantner and Caren Wheelwright. I owe each and everyone of these people plus everyone who voted for me a debt of gratitude. Thank you.

Straits Pond

TO THE EDITOR:
Merle Brown, Chairman
Board of Selectmen

On behalf of the Straits Pond Watershed Association (SPWA) I extend my thanks to the Cohasset Board of Selectmen and to Mr. Haddad for the support and funding of the Straits Pond Management Plan. Working together with officials from the Towns of Cohasset and Hull the SPWA membership feels solutions to the ongoing problems, which have plagued Straits Pond for many years, can be found and implemented. We realize these problems did not happen overnight, and it will take time and money to solve them. We appreciate the towns' hiring of Environmental Science Services (ESS), who we hope will further guide our efforts to improve the water quality and the beauty of the Straits Pond area.

We wanted to express to the board that its assistance has not gone unnoticed or unappreciated. We hope we can continue to rely on your support, but for the moment just wanted to say thank you.

Lawry Reid
President SPWA

News from public hearing on runway

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

The sole Public Hearing on Massport's runway 14/32 proposal was last Wednesday in Boston. Robert Durand, for whose decision-making the Hearing was assembled, didn't show up. He went to a photo exhibit opening at the MFA, instead.

Virginia Buckingham, Massport's executive director, left the Hearing before the evening session, essentially walking out on the presentations by opponents. The FAA alternated opponents and proponents on the speaker list. Apparently there were so many more opponents that nearly all the evening was theirs. Massport representative Jose Juves was quoted as saying Buckingham considered the opponents repetitive!

Not repetitive, I found, but cumulatively decisive. I listened for six hours and concluded something new to me, which Sec. Durand and Ms. Buckingham missed. The reason for delays and pollution at Logan is poor management. No one person convinced me. It was dozens of Greater Boston residents, dozens of elected officials from US Congressman Capuano to former Governor Dukakis arrived direct from an Amtrak Board meeting in DC, veteran dragon-slayer Bernice Mader from the Quincy Mayor's office, and Marilyn Fenalosa, National Trust for Historic Preservation. Each let a little air out of Massport's puffed up claims, until they deflated entirely. One political insider said to me, "This is by far the most diverse group I have ever seen working together on a single issue in Greater Boston!"

Of the proponents, Boston Chamber of Commerce President Paul Guzzi seemed most sensible: an effort to decrease delays is good; it is important to continue economic growth. He favored a more comprehensive approach to transportation. He supported high speed rail. The South Shore Jet Pollution Council agrees with all of that. What emerged from everyone's combined testimony is that another runway is not a sane path to those good goals.

Sen. Bob Hedlund and Rep. Garrett Bradley stood at the podium in solidarity with numerous Boston colleagues. Hingham Selectman Mat MacIver and SSJPC attorney Bill Golden made concise, hard-hitting points. Many South Shore residents spoke to the meeting.

The reason for delays and pollution at Logan is poor management.

Michael Dukakis announced there will be a total of eighteen Acela train runs daily — much easier on the traveler than the air shuttle/cab rides ordeal. A big percentage of the Logan & NY airports' clogging is those air shuttles. He was tired of an obsolete runway scheme kicked around for more than 20 years. They told us it would ruin the economy if we didn't build it last time!, he said. He and other speakers reminded the crowd that peak period pricing had been an instant fix for delays when it was tried in the 80s. After all of Massport's gotta-have-a-runway PR, it was a delightful clearing of the air to hear him describe scenarios that will work much better than any airport expansion.

Congressman Capuano announced that the very short Public Comment Period has been extended 30 days. The federal/FAA deadline is now June 6, 2001. The state deadline is June 8, 2001. See last week's Hingham Journal or the elected official list at http://jet_noise.tripod.com/southshorejet/ for the addresses.

Mary Ann Frye is an alternate member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council.

COHASSET CARES

Two months to PAYT!

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

On July 1 Cohasset starts Pay-as-you-throw ["buck-a-bag"]. If you haven't been doing so already, now is the time to sharpen your recycling skills, because for the good of our planet [for personal peace of mind and for economic benefit to the town], starting in July we pay for what we don't recycle. Our more intensive sorting will certainly start us thinking about unnecessary wrappings, excessive packaging. Our lifestyles will eventually become more streamlined, more meaningful, more thoughtful.

Our lifestyles will eventually become more streamlined, more meaningful, more thoughtful.

Our more intensive sorting requires some kind of system, some organization, containers somewhere in or near the kitchen, receptacles handy. The sorting should encourage composting, if we haven't already been composting. Nothing could be simpler than composting; it returns organic matter to the soil where it's needed, helps to alleviate typically acid Cohasset soil.

Remember waxed dairy cartons go in the junk mail [hopefully flattened]. Brown paper bags go in the cardboard, as do cereal boxes, tp rolls, other regular cardboard items. Three types of plastics. Flattened tin cans take up much less space [less cost for the town] than those that aren't flattened.

What's left we pay for, a dollar per large [30 gal.] bag, 50 cents per small [15 gal.] bag. I know someone who's aiming for one bag per year. The thing is, start now. Get ready now. Practice. We'll be living lighter on the earth. See you next time.

Town has number of historic notables

Wadsworth said the common looks much like it did when first created in 1670. "It was part of the undivided common land, like Boston Common" he explained. "This was originally part of Hingham, and when they surveyed and divided up the land of Conahasset, the original name of the town, they left a strip through the middle."

"It's a classic New England town common."

— Town Archivist David Wadsworth,

The Cohasset Common Historic District includes the houses and buildings that surround the common, as well as the houses along North Main Street down to Sohier Street. It also includes St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, which sits high atop the granite ledge at the south end of the common.

Wadsworth said the only changes that occurred on the common since its creation was the formal delineation of the "Duck Pond" — formally known as the Meeting House Pond — and the removal of businesses at the south end of the common where the World War I Veteran's Memorial is now located.

The pond was originally a sinkhole left from the last glacial age. Wadsworth said the common's flatness is natural, and more than likely, a piece of ice was trapped under some earth and eventually melted leaving a depression. A similar sinkhole can he seen at the corner of North Main Street and Joy Place.

Wadsworth said in the early 1900's the town created a formal pond and pathway.

The oldest building in the district, the Joseph Bates House located at 67 North Main St., was built in 1713.

The common is the only area in town to have a historic district commission.

"It's almost a zoning type of regulatory agency," Wadsworth explained. The commission was created in 1978 as a town bylaw, and is made up of district residents, architects and realtors. Under the bylaw, "no building or structure within the district shall be altered or constructed in any way that affects exterior architectural features" without prior approval from the commission.

The Caleb Lothrop house, on Summer Street, and home to the Cohasset Historical Society, was the first Cohasset location that made it onto the national register. Wadsworth said the house, was placed on the register in 1976, is a "good example of an 1820's Federal-style house."

In 1994, Government Island, formerly the Shore Station for Minot Ledge Lighthouse, was awarded with a place on the register. Government Island was owned by the federal Lighthouse Establishment until 1947 when the light became automated. It was then declared surplus land and sold to the town.

The Gropius House, also known as the Josephine Hagerty house, is notable mainly because of who designed it. Wadsworth said the house was the second one Gropius, a world-renowned architect who pioneered the "modern" look, designed after coming to the United States in the late 1930's.

But when asked if it was unusual to have so many in such a small town, Wadsworth said "It's unusual because there are so few."

According to Wadsworth, a town like Cohasset, rich in architecture and history, could have several more locations, but the nominations take a while to compile. He said the historical society is in the process of getting the group's two museums, the Captain John Wilson House and the Maritime Museum — both located in the village — on the register, as well as the Central Cemetery.

49 Highland Ave. 1824. Style: Federal. Second Congregational Church. Several times enlarged, this church was the result of a division in the original First Parish. For years it presented a Gothic facade, but was restyled following a fire in the 1920s.

53 Highland Ave. c. 1830. Style: Hip-roof Federal. Congregational Church Parsonage. Built as a parsonage this later was lived in by the Tower family, then the Everett Gammons family. It is a good example of the hip-roofed variant in Federal architecture.

59 Highland Ave. 1816 and 1901. Style: 2nd Empire mansard roofed. Owned by Edward Everett Tower, this house was rebuilt in Victorian style; then it was destroyed by fire, and once again rebuilt, from the plans of the previous design. Lived in later by Charles W. Gammons.

61 Highland Ave. 1852. Style: Greek Revival. Capt. James Collier Jr. House. Built by one of Cohasset's best known "Deep Sea Captains" from the prominent Collier family.

63 Highland Ave. 1793. Style: Federal. Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House. Capt. Bates Jr. died in 1803 when his schooner was wrecked on Brush Island, Cohasset. He owned the Bates family fishing business and Bates Wharf, built by his father, at Border St., Cohasset Harbor. Later the house was lived in by the Willcutt and Merriam families.

HISTORIC TREASURES

'Gifts' worthy of protecting, preserving

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

History is everywhere on the South Shore, from the centuries of secrets lying on the sandy shores of Plymouth all the way up to Boston, where much of the country's political history began.

Tourists frequently visit the area, looking for signs and remembrances of the first settlers who came here in the 17th century searching for a new way of life. And quite often, visitors are astounded by what they find tucked away on the side roads and main streets well beyond the typical attractions of Plymouth.

"It is vital that people recognize what makes all these historic communities in Massachusetts unique," said Betsy Friedberg of the Massachusetts Historical Commission. "I didn't grow up here, but I grew up with so many stories about this state. There's so many places around here that reflect the past."

And there are many.

"When I was a little girl, I was growing up in Marblehead," said Elsa Fitzgerald, assistant director of the Massachusetts Historical Commission. "It was a tremendously historically rich environment. I thought every other town would be like that, but what a shock it was when I found out that many of them were not. It's a gift to live in a community like the South Shore that is so rich in tradition, architecture, and history. It's important to keep those values alive."

For those visiting or living on the South Shore, there are a plethora of historically significant stops to inform, educate and entertain — whether it be the birthplace of Abigail Adams in Weymouth, the obscure Parting Ways cemetery in Kingston, or the Marshfield home of renowned statesman Daniel Webster.

It is important to remember that different historical places and structures on the South Shore and in the rest of the Commonwealth hold various degrees of significance, or "designations," as they are called by officials at the state historical commission.

Designations not only classify certain properties, but also, they aid in the preservation of those areas by serving as a means of protection for them through state and national guidelines, and through the financial assistance of various grants.

There are different kinds of designations with different rules and regulations surrounding them — to understand those guidelines is to have a more firm grasp of history.

The National Register of Historic Places

The National Register of Historic Places is a listing of major cultural and historic resources in the United States.

According to the Massachusetts Historical Commission, the National Register is "the official list of the American cultural resources worthy of preservation...it is part of a national program to coordinate and support public and private efforts to identify, evaluate, and protect our historic and archaeological resources."

"It is a federal program that got started in 1966," Friedberg explained, noting the program is monitored by the United States Department of the Interior National Park Service. However, the program is administered locally by the Massachusetts Historical Commission.

"Properties can be listed on the register individually, or part of a group," she added. Any area that has a number of National Register properties existing in a group is known as a "National Register District."

Citizens or organizations in Massachusetts that want to have a place or structure put on the National Register are required to go through an application process.

Friedberg said there are no strict guidelines which protect places on the National Register, as she said being on the list is merely something that is "largely honorary."

She added there is also something called the State Register of Historic Places, which is not done through an application process, but rather, on a selective basis. Properties on that list tend to have more local significance than national.

Local Historic Districts

A local historic district is much different than a National Register District, according to Chris Skelly, director of local government programs at the Massachusetts Historical Commission.

"They're completely different," Skelly said, but added that like a National Register District, a local historic district is a "grouping" of historically significant structures in one area.

He explained that the process of getting a place designated as a local historic district is more in the hands of the citizens — with a National Historic District, the process is mainly in the hands of the federal government.

"First, a local historic district commission would have to be formed in a given town," Skelly said, noting that the group is appointed by a board of selectmen. "That local committee prepares a report (detailing why a place should be a local historic district), then we review it. After that, it goes to town meeting, and it's up to the public to decide. It takes a two-thirds majority to get it passed."

Skelly said the real difference is in how National Register Districts and local historic districts are protected. While those on a national level are merely of honorary status, local historic districts can be protected as leniently or as strictly as a given town commission sees fit. Local guidelines for historic districts are often much more strict than national rules.

"When I was a little girl, I was growing up in Marblehead. It was a tremendously historically rich environment. I thought every other town would be like that, but what a shock it was when I found out that many of them were not. It's a gift to live in a community like the South Shore that is so rich in tradition, architecture, and history. It's important to keep those values alive."

– Elsa Fitzgerald, assistant director of the Massachusetts Historical Commission

Sometimes, local district committees decide to regulate the way people living in a local historic district paint their homes, what signs they put up, the building of structures such as fences and ramps, and even what kind of roofing material people use. Some towns do not even have historic districts or historic district committees for that matter.

"We encourage towns to establish local historic districts," Skelly said. "It's one of the most effective means of historic preservation."

National Historic Landmarks

These are the most prestigious forms of historic designations. There is also a state list of local landmarks, but there are not a lot of local ones in the South Shore area.

The state list of local landmarks include places or buildings of national importance, however, they are monitored by local government.

"You find those local landmarks mostly in Boston," Skelly said.

A national historic landmark is a building, a district, or a structure that has been deemed by the Secretary of the Interior to be nationally significant. Some national landmarks include places like Mt. Vernon, Martin Luther King's birth place, and Pearl Harbor. Some national landmarks in the area include the Gen. Benjamin Lincoln home in Hingham, the Abigail Adams home, and of course, Plymouth rock.

The process of selecting what is or what is not a landmark is initiated through studies of the National Park Service. Final decisions on landmark designations come directly from the Secretary of the Interior. In addition, when something is deemed as a landmark, it is automatically put on the National Register of Historic Places.

Getting a national landmark designation for a place or structure does not happen too often—of the 65,000 entries in the National Register, only 2,100 of them are national landmarks.

Rebuilding a piece of history

Effort helped restore home of Abigail Adams

By Shanley Stern
SSTERN@CNC.COM

Apart from the tiny shoes by the parlor hearth and a wooden baby's cradle standing empty in a kitchen corner, there is little left of the original Weymouth home in which Abigail Adams played as a small child.

The birthplace of America's First Lady to live in the White House stood abandoned, broken and merely a shadow of the majestic mansion it was built to be for more than 100 years.

Originally built in 1685, the home did not reach the height of its beauty and elegance until 1738 when Adams' parents purchased and added onto the existing structure, according to "Weymouth History," a book chronicling the town through the years. But by the middle of the 1800s, after the children were grown and parents long buried, the property was sold and slowly crumbled into disrepair.

Unrecognizable to the common eye by 1947, the remains were scheduled to be demolished to make way for a new housing development. A few short weeks before the wrecking balls slammed into its walls, a small historical society rediscovered the home's significance and saved it from ruin.

It was from there that the Abigail Adams house became the restored historic landmark that it is today. By carefully splitting the house in two parts, it was moved from Bridge Street to the corner of North and Norton streets. Original materials were taken from colonial structures all over the South Shore to create the exact atmosphere Abigail experienced as a child.

"With most of the original architecture lost over the years," local historical author Janette Holt said, "floor boards were brought in from South Weymouth, kitchen beams and panels were brought in from a period Hingham tavern and much of the decorative paneling in the front receiving rooms was brought in from a distinguished colonial home in Braintree."

"With most of the original architecture lost over the years, floor boards were brought in from South Weymouth, kitchen beams and panels were brought in from a period Hingham tavern and much of the decorative paneling in the front receiving rooms was brought in from a distinguished colonial home in Braintree."

Since the historical mansion was rebuilt for touring purposes, everything from the original artifacts to the interior decorating to the cookware date back to the 18th century. The only remnant of 20th century technology is the installation of electricity. Collections such as the copper pots and pans hanging by the open hearth in the kitchen to the rocking chair in the parlor speak to the history and elegance of the house, Holt said.

As visitors travel the steep stairs up into the first bedroom, they are greeted by an old fireplace adorned with four bricks taken from the original White House during its renovation in the early 1900s.

Even the outside gardens replicate the needs of the 1700s. From vegetables to herbs, the garden would feed any big family as well as serve as a remedy for aches and pains.

The colonial style and simple design of the Abigail Adams home is still copied in many New England homes today. Some homeowners even strive to build exact replicas of the home, but equipped with modern conveniences.

Pamela Petro, a Cape Cod resident bought exactly that. Architect Gertrude Vaughn modeled Petro's home after the Adams' mansion, but added slight differences to enhance light and convenience.

"Her goal was to maintain a 20th century standard of comfort within the 300-year-old design, while retaining an atmosphere of the past," Petro said. "The differences between the two completed homes balance on degrees of personal tolerance to such things as cold, darkness, crowding and lack of running water."

Apart from the widening of steps and the addition of more windows, Petro said there is little difference in the structure of the two homes. She said the main differences lie in things such as space, modern appliances and a greater amount of light.

The original Abigail Adams home is visited so many times a year not only because of its historical value, but also for the strides Adams was able to make for women even as far back as the 1700s, Holt said. With little education and a mother to six children, Adams was known for speaking her mind and portraying modern ideas for women's rights. Other than Barbara Bush, she is the only woman to be the wife of a president, and the mother of a president.

For all who come to view the home and also the Adams site in Quincy they are taken back into a time when the country was newborn and their ancestors helped shape the future of the land.

The Daniel Webster Estate, located on Webster Street in Marshfield, has changed hands as well as appearances over the years.

Webster estate serves as a link to the past

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

He was a legend in his own time, but his name and his home will live forever in Marshfield.

Daniel Webster was a highly respected Massachusetts senator, United States congressman, lawyer, orator, statesman, and intellectual of the 19th century. Although he was a native of New Hampshire, it is Marshfield that he eventually called his permanent residence.

His home, known these days as the Daniel Webster Estate, still exists in Marshfield as a major tourist attraction, and because of its historical importance, it was placed as a listing in the National Register of Historic Places in 1993.

"It took us a while to get it on the register," said Marshfield Historical Commission member Betty Magoun Bates. "We got the initial process going in 1987."

"The Webster estate represents a connection with our past," added commission member Anne Philbrick Hall. "Not only for Marshfield, but also for Massachusetts and the entire country."

Since the time the Webster estate was deemed as a nationally significant place, the historical commission has received four different grants from the Commonwealth in order to keep the estate in good shape. Private funds from an anonymous Daniel Webster admirer in Marshfield have also contributed to the estate's upkeep, Bates said.

Bates added the grants have made it possible to initiate the planned restoration project of the Webster estate, which will include "six phases" of work and will begin this spring. Bates said the landscaping plans for the estate were based on the extensive writings of Webster, as among many other things, he was a renowned and respected farmer.

"This was his place of places," said historical commission member Joan Scolponeti, "and I don't think people appreciate it enough. The main thing we're trying to do with the restoration is have a museum located there, and we also want to be able to make it available for various kinds of functions like weddings."

Part of the mystique of the Webster estate emanates from the legend of the man himself.

"There have been many books written about Webster," said Cynthia Krusell, also member of the historical commission. "The only people who've had more books written about them are people like Abraham Lincoln and George Washington…Webster was voted by American historians as one of the five greatest senators in the history of the United States."

"This was his place of places and I don't think people appreciate it enough. The main thing we're trying to do with the restoration is have a museum located there, and we also want to be able to make it available for various kinds of functions like weddings."
Marshfield Historical Society member Joan Scolponeti

"Webster was mostly known as a great statesman, but he was so many other things," Bates added. "Even though he was born in New Hampshire, we like to claim him. Webster fell in love with Marshfield when he was passing through it on his way to his home in Boston. He saw a place then known as the Thomas Farm, and he purchased it in 1832. That was the place that eventually became the Webster estate."

The history of the Webster property traces all the way back to 1640, two decades after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock. At that time, the land was granted to a man named William Thomas by a group of early settlers called the Plymouth Proprietors. The property was at that time comprised of about two square miles — today, the estate's land is made up of only 14 acres.

In 1643, the first town meeting occurred in a house built on some of Thomas' land that he decided to donate to the town. In 1645, a school was founded in that meeting house, but today, the site is better known as the Winslow Cemetery.

During the Revolutionary War, Nathaniel Thomas, a descendant of William Thomas, built his own home on the (Webster) property and allowed British troops to take shelter there, as he was faithful to the King of England. Eventually, Nathaniel was pushed out of town by the local branches of the military existing at the time because of his support of the British forces.

However, John Thomas, son of Nathaniel, eventually took over the estate, remaining faithful not to the British, but to the Patriot cause. John lived there until 1832, when he decided to sell the place to Webster.

"John Thomas probably sold the place to Webster for financial reasons," said Bates, noting an economic depression was taking place during the early 1830s. "I don't think the Thomas family ever recovered financially from the effects of the Revolutionary War."

When Webster bought the estate, he turned it into a remarkable place by farming, breeding cattle and llamas, planting orchards and 100,000 trees, and building an observatory. By the time he built his property up to the maximum degree, Webster owned about 1,800 acres.

He was a true farmer and participated in many agriculturally based local competitions. Bates said Webster was one of the first people to start building the foundations of the now annual Marshfield Fair.

Webster spent his last days at his home, and died in 1852. He was buried at the Winslow Cemetery. In 1878, tragedy struck the estate and it burned to the ground. But soon after the incident, the place was rebuilt by Webster's daughter-in-law, Caroline White Webster. Webster's only son, Caroline's husband, was killed in action at the second battle of Bull Run in 1864.

"That is really a tragic part of the Webster story," Bates said, "the fact that after his son was killed, there was no living male heir to the family."

Since the late 19th century, the Webster estate has been handled by different people. Caroline sold the place to a Marshfield Hills resident named Walton Hall. In 1950, the Hall family sold the estate to Vincent Cohee. In 1995, it was the Town of Marshfield which bought the remaining 14 acres of the estate for preservation purposes.

"First, we want to get the place back in good condition," Scolponeti said. "Then we want to see about getting a person in residence to stay there in order to take care of it. Webster's home needs to be tended to, because it was a part of him, and it played such an important role in his life. He was very relaxed when he was there. Even today, the place serves as a marvelous benefit to school kids in terms of learning about government, zoology, and botany. It's a piece of history right here for everyone to see."

Other sources used for this story include a Marshfield Historical Commission pamphlet called "The Daniel Webster Estate," and also the book "Marshfield: A Town of Villages 1640-1990" by Cynthia Krusell and Betty Magoun Bates.

History buried in remote site

Landmark was home to first free black settlers

By Shanley Stern
SSTERN@CNC.COM

Hundreds drive by this tiny fenced in plot every day, but most are not even aware it exists. Though humble in appearance and hidden from view, one grassy sector whispers of long ago forgotten heroes, slave emancipation and a country fighting for its independence.

"The story is that these slaves at the time of the Revolutionary War belonged to two men in Kingston. As a reward for their services (in the military) they were given their freedom after the war and a 94-acre tract of land was allotted to them. These men lived on this property and died there."

Joseph Ryan in a letter to Kingston selectmen

STAFF PHOTOS/CHRIS BERNSTEIN

Parting Ways Cemetery is virtually hidden in the town of Kingston, but its historical significance holds strong even today, and reminds people of a time when a nation was struggling to get on its feet.

A large slab of stone serves as a memorial for the slaves who fought and died in the Revolutionary War.

Parting Ways Cemetery, once part a 94-acre farm, is now reduced to a 12-by-24-foot tract off of Plympton Road in Kingston. The spot was never intended to be a burial ground, it was simply a common practice in the days of the Revolutionary War to lay land owners to rest on a small section of where they once worked their fields.

And so was the case for four Kingston men who distinguished themselves as soldiers, land owners and as some of the first United States citizens, according to local historian and author Doris Melville. But in the year of 1777, what set the lives of Cato Howe, Prince Williams, Plato Turner and Quamony Quash apart from the many other veterans was the color of their skin. The four black men left Kingston as slaves willing to die for a colony that dragged more than 1 million people from the shores of Africa to work without rights, respect or even pay. They were the only four in Kingston who asked their masters to allow their enlistment and each one returned home from the war.

Not long after their arrival, Massachusetts inducted their own state constitution, outlawing slavery state-wide in 1780, Willam T. Davis said in his book "Memories of an Octogenarian." Because of their voluntary military service and even exemplary performance as soldiers, the new United States government gifted 94 acres of land to the four men, along with their freedom. The land was sectioned off, with each man given approximately 20-plus acres to make their home. Davis said it was a way to give each somewhere to go after leaving their master's land, a way to begin a new life.

"The story is that these slaves at the time of the Revolutionary War," stated Joseph Ryan of the Veterans' Graves Registration board in a letter to the Kingston library, "belonged to two men in Kingston. As a reward for their services (in the military) they were given their freedom after the war and a 94-acre tract of land was allotted to them. These men lived on this property and died there."

The land, later nicknamed "New Guinea," fell mostly in the town of Plymouth, but continued for 15 acres in Kingston. Though currently owned by Plymouth, the site is relatively unknown to Kingston town officials, even today.

"I don't know anything about it," Walter Hoeg of the Kingston historical commission said, "I can't even really tell you where it is."

And seemingly no one else at the Kingston town hall had any knowledge of the cemetery. Only the town librarians in the small local history room could pinpoint the location and remember the historical significance.

Before 1976, the four graves were unmarked and only visible to hikers who ventured through the brush off of Plympton Road and Bishops Highway. After Marjorie Anderson of Plymouth headed up the Plymouth Bicentennial Advisory Committee on Black History and Culture, the graves were set aside as a historical landmark, with the remaining acreage as an archeological site.

In conjunction with Dr. James Deetz, a professor at Brown University, not only were the graves identified and sectioned off, but two foundations, believed to be the remains of Howe and Quash's homes, were discovered and preserved. The rest of the acreage was set aside for a cemetery in Plymouth.

The details of how Williams, Howe, Turner and Quash lived out their lives on this land is not clear, except through scattered scenarios captured in Davis' 1906 publication. Davis' recalls a conversation between Quash and Turner during a funeral procession where they were hired as pallbearers. Davis said Quash asked Turner if he was given gloves, as was customary for pallbearers to wear. Turner answered, "no, we no bear widout glubs. Let the man in the box carry hisself."

Letters written during the war, by an unknown source, also depict a story of Quash during the war participating in the capture of a British general. As written in the letters, Quash allegedly banged in the door with his head, clearing the way for the others to restrain the general.

Today, though the location of Parting Ways Cemetery masks its historical importance as one of the earliest free black settlements in the United States from the common person, it will remain untouched and preserved as a reminder and a national landmark.

Former Herring Brook superintendent Tommy Reading. He made it his priority to rid the brook of devious beavers.

Herring Brook has long-running significance

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Although it is not a landmark, historic district, or a listing on the National Register of Historic Places, it very well could be one day due to its longstanding history and meaning on the South Shore.

Herring Brook, also known as "Thomas A. Reading Park" in Pembroke, is filled with tradition, a place the natives of the town hold dear to their hearts. It is a tranquil place where people can sit and relax, but Herring Brook also serves as entertainment for people in the form of watching the herring run upstream every spring and every fall.

"Over the past 15 years, the herring population has dwindled," said Herring Brook superintendent Burton Sherman. "Nobody ever really paid attention enough to keep it maintained. It's important to keep the (herring) cycle going."

Sherman also serves as chairman on the Herring Fisheries Commission in town, an organization responsible "for maintaining (Herring Brook), cleaning out debris from the waters, and allowing for safe passage of herring."

One of Pembroke's biggest events takes place at Herring Brook every year — the annual fish fry, a tradition which began back in 1977. It was actually written about in a recent issue of Yankee Magazine.

"A lot of people turn out for the fish fry, and it's good to see that kind of public support," Sherman said. "I think a large majority of people in the town have a lot of respect for the place."

But Herring Brook's history started way before the fish fry, and in fact, long before the 20th century.

"As far as I know, the history of the place goes back to the mid 1600s," Sherman said. "The first settlers used the herring not only for food, but for fertilizer as well. The Indians who were here also used the brook for fishing. They were really the first fishermen around here."

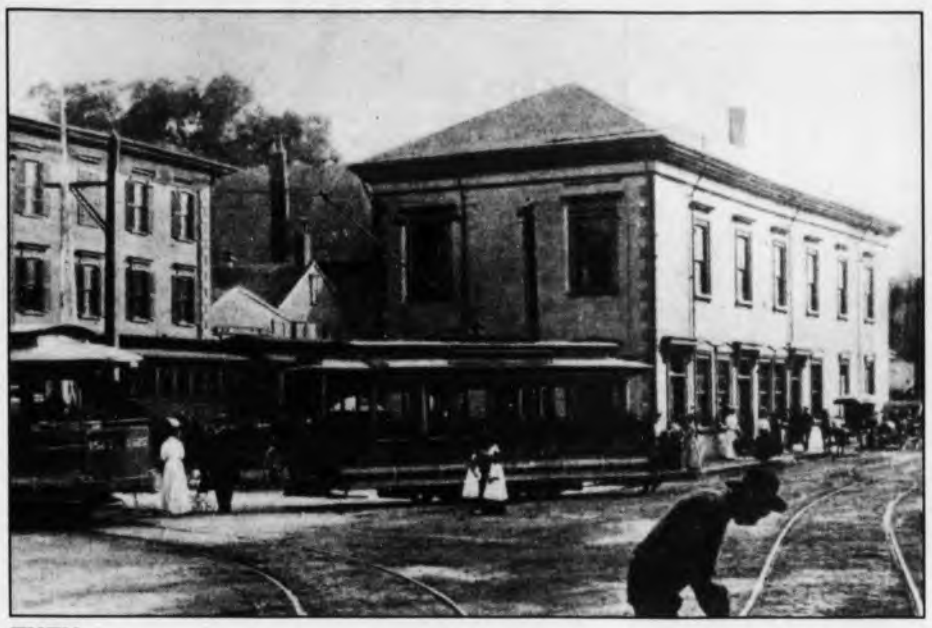
In a town history book by Ed Quill called "Pembroke 2000, a Century of Change," it states, "In the 1640s, when the first settler, Robert Barker, canoed up the North River with his friend Delor Davis, they paddled up a smaller side stream now known as Herring Brook. After building a small cabin, they held on through the winter. In the spring, they caught much herring and survived."

Sherman added in the early days, herring served as a contribution to the economy, and by the 18th century, Herring Brook became synonymous with early forms of industry.

"The first machine-made iron nails manufactured in the country were turned out in the 1720s at a mill on Herring Brook," Quill stated in his book. "The mills got their power by the push of Pembroke's streams." There were an abundance of other mills along many of the streams in Pembroke during that era.

Quill went on to state the "mill dams" existing at the time eventually started threatening the local herring population, and legislation was immediately passed to protect the species. It was also at that time locals started gathering at the brook every year to marvel at the herring making their way upstream.

In his book, Quill also notes a passage from a book by Alan D. Dunphy called "Pembroke Revisited" which states "In 1772, greedy for added revenue, the town (of Pembroke) assumed a monopoly of the herring industry, allotting five barrels to the remnant of the Massachusetts tribe of Indians and prohibiting them to fish the stream further." Incidentally, Dunphy was the man who proposed holding the first Pembroke Fish Fry in 1977.



Sherman said by the mid-19th century, the herring population was still relatively full, and people were still fishing the waters.

"There was a tradition in the 1850s which said every widow in town would get a portion of the annual herring catch," Sherman said.

Quill wrote that by the 1950s, the herring population in town was threatened by the arrival of beavers, who would block streams with dams making it very hard for the herring to run. Under a local organization called the Herring Run Restoration Committee, the first herring superintendent,

Square showcases Hingham's heritage

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Hingham Square is not only an area of great beauty — it is also a window into the town's rich past.

But it is not only Hingham Square which holds significance; one could consider the whole town to be a historical gold mine.

Town historian and former Hingham Historical Society president Alexander Macmillan said there are seven different local historic districts within the town, two existing National Register districts, and hundreds of homes and buildings which are listed on the National Register.

Within Hingham Square, also existing are two of the three prestigious national landmarks in the town — The home of General Benjamin Lincoln and the legendary (First Parish) Old Ship Church, also known as the Old Meeting House. The square as a whole is considered one of the town's most well-known local historic districts.

"Some people who live in Hingham take it for granted," Macmillan said, "but there's a lot of things about it that are really unique nationally. We probably have one of the largest collections of 17th, 18th, and 19th structures in America.
Alexander Macmillan

"Some people who live in Hingham take it for granted," Macmillan said, "but there's a lot of things about it that are really unique nationally. We probably have one of the largest collections of 17th, 18th, and 19th structures in America. Fortunately, we have managed to preserve our heritage."

Macmillan said when he thinks of Hingham Square, he thinks of the area "running the length of North and South streets down to Hingham Harbor," but he said people around the area have different interpretations of what constitutes the boundaries of the square.

"That was actually the area of original settlement by the first arrivals to the town in 1635," Macmillan added, referring to the square. "Many people who live in the town now are direct descendents of the first settlers who came here."

Macmillan described both the Benjamin Lincoln homestead and the Old Ship Church as "national treasures." The Lincoln home was established back in 1667, but it was his name and his actions in the military and in politics during the 18th century which made the home famous.

Lincoln was a prominent figure in Hingham before, during, and after the Revolutionary War according to a Hingham history book called "Not All Is Changed: A Life History of Hingham," by Francis and Lorena Hart.

Lincoln was born in 1733, and by the time he was 24, he was serving as the town clerk of Hingham. At the age of 32, he became a selectman for the town.

By 1773, Lincoln represented Hingham by serving in the General Court and also the Provincial Congress.

When the Revolutionary War broke out, Lincoln began his military service by taking charge of a division in New York, and he was wounded at a battle in Saratoga. After he recovered, Gen. George Washington made him commander of the Southern Continental Army. He was eventually promoted to the position of Secretary of War by Washington.

After the war, Lincoln went back to Hingham and remained active in local politics, even though his injuries from the war were getting the best of him. He died in 1810, but his name remains a frequent topic of conversation in town, and his home remains as a reminder to everyone of his triumphs.

Gen. Benjamin Lincoln, one of the most famous residents of Hingham Square.

Macmillan said the other prominent national landmark located within Hingham Square is the Old Ship Church (the Old Meeting House), which was first constructed in 1681.

In their book, the Harts state, "The most impressive monument of (that) era was a new meeting house. In the Massachusetts Bay Colony, 30 meeting houses were built between 1677 and 1683, most of them to replace aging, more primitive buildings. Only one of them, Hingham's, survives…What did it signify to those who saw it first? We can only guess. It may well have signaled a new time of peace and prosperity with new cultural priorities."

According to an article called "Ecclesiastical History of Hingham" by Francis H. Lincoln, "No house for public worship exists within the original limits of the United States, which continues to be used for the purpose for which it was erected, and remaining on the same site where it was built, which is so old as the meeting house of the First Parish in Hingham."

Lincoln stated in his article that the meeting house went through many changes after it was initially built — it was enlarged in 1755, and it was improved again in 1780. In 1822, stoves for heating were put into the building when they were introduced, and in 1869, the present pews which exist on the floor of the building were installed. In 1870, a new organ was purchased — it is still the one in use there today.

Macmillan said historians in Hingham are always looking to protect the historical resources in town through grants, and he believes the town is doing a good job in preserving its heritage, whether it has to do with the national register, historic districts, or protecting landmarks.

"Those efforts are very worthwhile," Macmillan said, "because these kinds of resources are very educational. Although a lot of people take the history of the town for granted, I believe a large part of the population recognizes what they have and are pretty conscientious in terms of cultural awareness."

In addition to the other sources listed in this story, a book called "When I Think of Hingham" by Michael J. Shilhan was used as a reference.

The Herring Run now serves as a scenic area for passersby, but it once was a focal point for economic survival in Pembroke. Although it is not acknowledged as a landmark or a National Register property, many people feel it will someday get the recognition it deserves.

Bud Tuells, was elected. Tuells soon passed away and was replaced by Tom Reading in 1972.

Since the mid 20th century, the herring population has not been as stocked as it was in its early days, but Sherman said that may be changing soon enough.

"Our efforts have really been on bringing the herring back," Sherman said. "I think we're going to see a really good spring run this year. Herring is a great resource, and what's more, the general population is fascinated with them and their cycle. It's a big part of the town's history, and that's another reason I think people enjoy it so much, because people around here are especially fascinated with two things—nature and history."

'Godspell' makes a tuneful return

On May 11-13 Ron Emmons will end his teaching and directing career of 39 years with a production of his Cohasset Drama Workshop's most successful show of all time, the rock-musical "Godspell." This will mark the ninth time that Emmons has directed the show in Cohasset. The production will incorporate cast members from CHS productions of the musical over the last three decades with current Cohasset High School students. Returning from past productions of Godspell are Stewart Replogle (1970s), Jenna Emmons (1980s), and Morgan Hurley, Julia Lovallo, and Ashley Ulmer (1990s). Joining them for their first Godspell are Dan Duffy, Lydia Guild, David Ingber, Elizabeth Ingber, Marisa Mello, Brenna O'Donnell, Jessica Stevermer, and Kim Ulmer. Serving as choreographer is Margaret Barlow, who appeared in Cohasset's first performance of Godspell in the fall of 1976. Barlow studied dance both here in the US and in England and has choreographed a number of stagings of Godspell including the most recent ones in Cohasset.

Godspell is one of the most often produced shows in theater history. The rock musical is based on the gospel according to Saint Matthew and has a score by Stephen Schwartz that embraces more than a dozen songs—including one in particular, "Day by Day," that became an international hit soon after the show premiered Off-Broadway some 30 years ago. Perhaps the greatest tribute to the show's popularity is the fact that its subject matter hasn't prevented it from receiving countless stagings in every conceivable venue. This Cohasset production will be performed at Second Congregational Church because the renovations about to begin at the high school have prevented use of the auditorium. "I think we've found an intriguing venue," says Emmons. "Over the years we have performed Godspell in a variety of settings — the Cohasset Town Hall (We kept selling out and adding performances. Jim Vivian was playing Jesus and his family had moved, so he slept on the sofa at Perry and Judy Collins' house for a few weeks.), and Walton Rogers Hall at St. Stephen's Church (on a humid, 98 degree Fourth of July). When I found out that the auditorium couldn't be used after we had paid rental and royalty fees for the show, I called Gary Ritts at the church; within an hour we had a home. The site feels great, and there's certainly going to be no problem for the audience feeling close to the performers. Margaret's had to be very creative with dance routines and we're going to have our usual seating cut in half, but I think the audience will be pleased. Alicia Laas is designing and constructing costumes that will brighten the stage."

"The site feels great, and there's certainly going to be no problem for the audience feeling close to the performers."
— Ron Emmons, director

In staging well-known sayings and stories of the Bible, John-Michael Tebelak's script calls on many theatrical devices — pantomime, children's games, charades, puppetry, vaudeville antics, the question-answer technique of minstrel shows, tap and soft shoe dancing, as well as songs and music of many styles — folk, ballad, pop, rock, light musical comedy, and dramatic. Commenting on the script in 1999, composer Stephen Schwartz pointed out that "the emphasis [in the original production] was on simplicity and on theatrical magic created by the actors without 'production values.' If the production looks too polished, the essence of the show has been lost." To this Emmons says, "Well, we've certainly had to minimize production values, but I agree that the spirit of the show is lost if it's too big or made into the typical bigger-than-life Broadway musical. The most recent production in Boston by a national touring company was an example of how not to do the show. The simplicity of Godspell was lost in a plethora of television monitors and computers. There were no tears at the end, and if there are no tears, the show has failed."

To provide back-up for this production a special group of musicians has been lined up: Gary Ritts, minister of Second Congregational Church, on keyboards; Joe Musolino, electric guitarist at the Paulist Center in Boston, on lead guitar; Linda French, Wheelock College astronomy professor and wife of the director, on electric bass; Dan Morse, Cohasset High School senior, on rhythm guitar; and Barry Tufts, Xaverian High School sophomore, on drums. Doing additional back-up vocals are Cohasset students Emily Dean and Betsy Anderson.

Emmons recalls the various people who have played Jesus in his presentations of Godspell, "Three of them have been women: Lisa Taylor (in the first), Kelly Tufts (in the most recent), and Jen Plante (somewhere in the middle). Jim Vivian; Linton Young; Kevin O'Donnell, who's studying acting at Julliard in New York; and Stew Replogle, who's playing Jesus for the third time. A number of cast members from the past have gone on to careers as professional performers: Jen Plante (acting in New York), Nancy Walls (on television's Daily Show), Sandy Dillon (rock musician in London), Lance Norris (on the radio's Big Mattress), and John Kuntz (writing and acting everywhere in Boston). I just saw Ali Kinchla, who was our last Judas, do a wonderful job in a BU production of Godspell a month ago." Emmons adds, "I would love to have some of the many people who have shared this show with me over the years join us. They can contact me at GodspellCHS@aol.com on the internet. They and this show have meant so much to me over the past 25 years."

Because seating for Godspell is far more limited than it would be at the high school (200 seats rather than 450), tickets should be purchased in advance from the main office at the high school or from cast members. Ticket information is also available by writing to GodspellCHS@aol.com. All tickets are $10 with one-third of the profits going to assist the Appalachia Service Project.

We'll give you something to smile about.

The number one singles player for the girls tennis team continued to dominate her opposition this week with a 6-0, 6-1 shellacking of Abington's top player. The sophomore is now 4-0 on the season, and has won 48 of her 53 games, losing more than one game in a set only once.

Tracksters continue to surprise

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Oh yes, they are for real.

Last Saturday at Mashpee High School, 26 different schools met to compete in the annual State Relays Competition. Though such division one powerhouses as Seekonk and East Bridgewater were there to show off their talent, the undermanned Cohasset team held their own with a seventh place finish.

"With 16 kids, we did outstanding," said third year coach Al LaFountain.

"You really have to strategically pair the younger kids with the older kids."

The girls team, also badly undermanned, finished toward the bottom of the pack, but coach Al LaFountain was pleased with the performances of both of his squads.

"We are handicapped with (low) numbers," noted LaFountain, who has a team of 14 girls, ten of them freshmen. "The young girls are all All-Stars once they get their confidence up."

Cohasset's best placing of the day was in the distance medley, as the Cohasset boys took second all around. Junior captain Pete Maitland got the team started with a strong 800, then sophomore Ian Kidder ran the shortest leg of the race with a 400. He was followed by junior Dan Kinchla with a 1200, and anchorman Tim Baird, a junior captain, in the mile.

The strong finish by the team was even more impressive, as both Kinchla and Baird had already run a mile race that day in a relay.

The closest Cohasset had to a first was in the boys 4x100 relay, as the Skippers were leading after three competitors, but a hiccup in the timing caused the team to be disqualified.

"We were in first, but they missed the final handoff," explained LaFountain. "It is a precision event. We will definitely have to work on that."

Another impressive teaming for Cohasset was the 4x1mile squad, who took fifth in a very strong field.

Baird, the best miler on the team, and arguably on the South Shore, ran the first leg to give Cohasset a terrific start. This was a strategic move of LaFountain, one he used and continues to use in many of his running relays.

"I would rather be chased than have to chase," said the coach of having his top athlete run the starting leg.

The other three runners in the 4x1mile were Kinchla, sophomore distance specialist Ross Lieb-Lappen, and newcomer freshman Andrew O'Keefe.

The girls team, though they did not place, turned in a respectable performance against very strong competition.

"The girls did a great job," lauded LaFountain. "They didn't back down."

Sophomore Maura O'Brien leads a core of very talented underclassmen, having already qualified for the state competition in the high jump. She is also on the verge of qualifying in the hurdles.

Freshman Jill Weber has already qualified in the 800 with a 2:34, and is also on the 4x100 qualifying team with fellow freshman Shelley Carter, Elise Jerome and Jen Buckley.

Individually, Buckley is very close in the one mile with a competitive time of 6:02, and is also nearing qualification in the javelin.

The girls had their first dual meet win of the season last Thursday over Hull, with every one of the team members, rookies and veterans alike, stepping up. Included on that list were the venerable seniors, captains Maureen Equi, Catherine Flaherty and Kerry-Ann McCarthy, as well as the fast freshman Ali Earon, Sarah and Leah McMorris and Tess Foley.

The only male to have qualified since the last time we spoke was senior Robin Cunningham in the 110-meter high hurdles.

Cohasset High tennis star Grossman continues to rip through competition

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

In only her second year as a varsity player, sophomore Lindsay Grossman is turning many a curious head with her All-Star type play early in the season for the girl's tennis team.

Grossman began the season with four laughers over Hanover, Norton, Abington and Cahvah, not exactly slouches for opponents. Playing the number one singles position for the Lady Skippers, Grossman has won 48 of her 53 games so far, losing two games in only one match. She has also yet to have her serve broken.

Playing last year as a freshman behind number one single, Kate Stone, Grossman did not even go to a third set in her undefeated year at second singles.

With Stone at the helm, Grossman learned a great deal, and tried to slip into some large yet fillable shoes by succeeding her.

"She is the one who made me stick with it," said Grossman, referring to last year's outstanding captain. "She really influenced me."

But Stone was not Grossman's only success assistant. Her father, Jeff, has also been a tremendous motivator to his daughters, including current seventh grader Chelsea.

"If it wasn't for him, I wouldn't be where I am now," admitted Grossman.

Jeff Grossman, a four year captain of the Colgate tennis team when he was in college, has helped develop Lindsay's game from the time she started as a young child.

"He has been pushing me since forever," laughed Grossman, who began playing when she was eight years old. "He is really determined to make me great."

Grossman's mother, Kathy Prevett, also a tremendous tennis player, has helped her daughter prepare herself since she started playing.

"My mom has helped me throughout the years I have been playing tennis," she said, "to think positively even when I have lost patience and

Local tracksters shine at state relays

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

Some teams aren't waiting around for the weather to stay warm on a consistent basis. When it comes to high school track in New England, the days of prime competition conditions don't arrive to stay until the season is nearly over anyway. If a meet happens to fall on a cold, windy day, well, so be it.

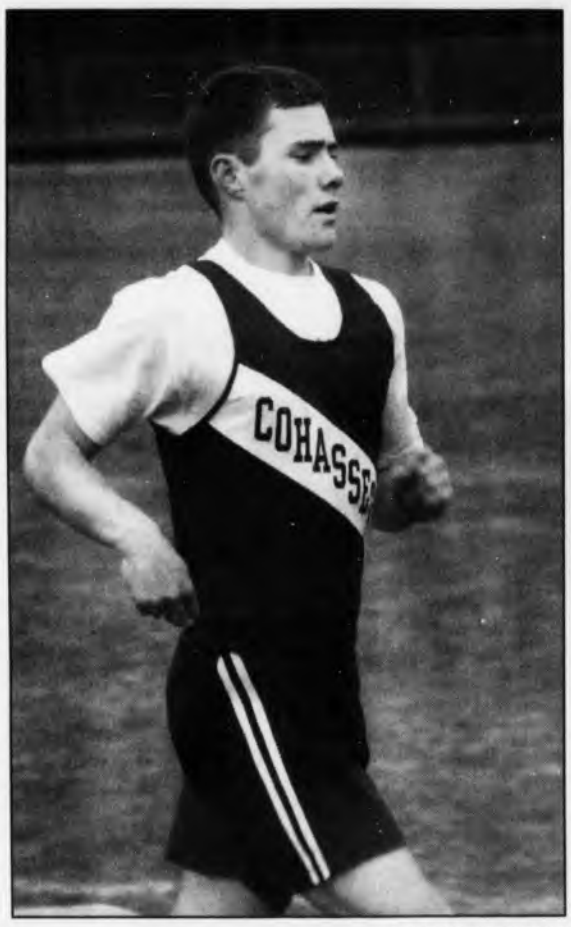
That was the case in Saturday's Class D relay meet at Mashpee, and the Scituate and Norwell girls track teams were up for the challenge, as was the Cohasset High boys team. The Scituate girls finished sixth overall with 28 points which started with a fourth-place finish in the 4 x 1,600-meter relay in the morning cold.

Sarah Kuendig, Lily Desmond, Lisa McEachern and anchor runner Emily Tansey posted a time of 23 minutes, 42.8 seconds— excellent, given it was the first event of the day on the track.

Jane Thies's 5-1-3/4 leap in the high jump was the best of the day. Aquila Judge cleared 5 feet and Kate Struzziero was solid and the Sailors had themselves a second-place, 14-4 finish to add to their team total. Norwell's Lydia Shute, Felecia Hawthorne and Christy Mayfield took third with a combined 14' total.

To no one's surprise, Judge turned in the best jump of the day with her 17-1 long jump, spurring Scituate to a second-place, 45-11-3/4 total along with Thies and Struzziero. The 42-5-1/2 total by Norwell's Margaret Shute, Jenna Zarick and Healy Zanengo was good for fourth. Margaret and Lydia Shute, and Carolyn Vaughn were third in the triple jump with an 88-9-1/2 performance.

Zarick hit a 62-second 400 to open the Clippers sprint medley. Allison Zarick and Margaret Shute took care of the middle 200 legs and Kayla Halloran ran a strong 800 anchor to give Norwell third in 4:29.9.



For Scituate, Hillary Birch launched a 105-8 toss, her best of the season, in the javelin. Lisa McEachern and Delia Teahan were on their proverbial game as well, giving the Sailors sixth with a 246-2 total. Birch, Kiely Cuddihy and Kelly Vose were sixth in the discus and the 4 x 800 team of Kuendig, Lily Desmond, McEachern and Tansey clocked a 10:34.2 for second. Teahan, Struzziero, Thies and Judge ran 54.6 for fifth in the 400-meter relay.

Norwell was particularly tough in the longer races, taking third in the distance medley. Lydia Halloran, Jenna Zarick, Vaughn and Kayla Halloran ran a solid 13:42.7, which head coach Chuck Martin believes could be lowered to 13:10 on a clear, warm day.

The Cohasset High boys team placed in the top six in four separate events and seventh overall with 22 points. Prepping for a defense of his Class D 200-meter title, Brian Krupczak teamed up with his brother Jared, freshman Erik Belz and Steve Laney to take fifth in the 4 x 200.

The discus team of Craig Davis, Laney and Cosimo Cambi combined for a 302-10 toss to take third. Distance ace Tim Baird anchored the distance medley team to second in 11:44.9 with his 1,600-meter leg. Peter Maitland opened with the 800 leg, followed by Ian Kidder at 400 and Dan Kinchla at 1,200. The foursome of Baird, Kinchla, Andrew O'Keefe and Ross Lieb-Lappen raced to fourth in the 4 x 1,600-meter race.

The Cohasset boys have just 16 athletes, but make up in quality what they lack in quantity. That bodes out well for a team in the invitational meets where points in the top-three positions weigh far more heavily than the 4-5-6 finishes.

Cohasset High tri- captain Pete Maitland got the Skippers going in the distance medley at Saturday's state relays with a strong 800-meter opening leg. The Cohasset foursome took second place in this event, the school's best finish on the day.

belief in myself."

Lindsay Grossman actually was ranked as an under-12 player in New England, but has since concentrated on the high school team, and not so much on outside tournaments.

"It is impressive," said Jeff Grossman. "I give her a lot of credit."

Part of Grossman's game development has included, among other strengths, a tremendous backhand. Believe me when I say this. I have been up at the net many a time to see Grossman lining up for one of her backhands, and it is not a pleasant situation.

Although her baseline game, including the backhand, is one of the strongest of any of her competitors, her net game and serves are equally difficult to combat.

"I have been working really hard since last year," said Grossman, coming as close to a boastful remark as you'll probably ever hear. "My forehand has improved a lot."

"She is an offensive player," appraised Jeff Grossman on the subject of his daughter's mid-range to net game. "She doesn't ever retreat from the baseline, and she has got quick hands at the net. She can end points quickly."

An intelligent three sport standout, basketball and field hockey being the other two, Grossman is a terrific All-Around athlete equipped with the mental game necessary to be successful.

"She is so mentally strong, I think she can beat anyone," effused tenth year coach Sarah "Gigi" Meehan.

With Grossman leading the way, the Cohasset girls team, which has made tournament in all 10 of their seasons under current coach Meehan, seems to be on the warpath again with three very decisive team wins to open the season.

The Lady Skippers did enter this season with hopes of dethroning the six-time defending South Shore League champions Norwell.

Grossman's Clipper counterpart, Sarah Bitetti, a junior and one of the premiere players in the area, should have two intense dogfights with Grossman when the two go head-to-head.

So, the Skippers should secure a successful season, with a sensational sophomore swinger surprising several senior skeptics on the South Shore.

Golf team gets first win in recent memory

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset golf team earned its first win in recent memory last week, taking a 5.5-3.5 victory over league rival Carver.

The Skippers top two golfers, Wil Prendergast and Jay Bertovich, each split the three available points, taking 1.5 apiece.

Number four golfer Ted Gledhill earned a half point, and the five-six combo of Rob Lehr and Greg O'Brien swept the three points to give the Skippers the victory.

"We haven't had the numbers in previous years to compete realistically, but these guys who are here now have a lot to be proud of."
Cohasset High golf coach
Torin Sweeney

The squad followed a similar script when it earned a tie with Abington, 4.5 -4.5. The Green Wave held a 4-2 lead with Lehr and O'Brien still on the course with their counterparts. However, the Cohasset pair took 2.5 of the possible three points to earn the tie for Skippers.

It was not known at the time of this writing how long it has been between Cohasset High wins on the links, but first year coach Torin Sweeney has been told it's probably been at least five years.

"We haven't had the numbers in previous years to compete realistically, but these guys who are here now have a lot to be proud of," said Sweeney, who also serves as the school's assistant athletic director, assistant football coach and head wrestling coach. "They've worked hard, and I'm sure there's more good days ahead."

Sweeney figures that the Skippers should remain competitive in all of their remaining matches, pointing to their balance one through six.

"Our depth is going to keep us in a lot of matches," said Sweeney. "We saw that the last two. Our top six golfers are so close. A lot of teams might have an edge on us in the top two or three spots, but I definitely think we have the edge at the bottom of the order."

This depth is expected to be bolstered soon with the return of Will Moody, who has been out of action due to illness the last few weeks. He should compete for one of six scoring spots with team.

It's a busy week for Cohasset, with matches scheduled every day, Tuesday through Friday.

"We lost a lot of time because of rain and vacation, but we should more than make up for that now," said Sweeney. "I'm still trying to get a feel for where we stand overall, but we should have a pretty good handle on that by the end of this week."

Tennis teams continue to roll

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

A combined 8-1 on the year, the boys and girls tennis teams have been making serious strides toward top contention in the playoffs.

Both squads defeated Abington 4-1 last Tuesday, the boys in Abington, and the girls at home.

Also recently, the girls knocked off Scituate 4-1 in their first non-league bout of the year, marking their first win over the Lady Sailors in over a decade. The win was even more impressive, given that it was pulled off without the help of the ailing sophomore first singles player Lindsay Grossman.

In that boys match, first singles player Erik Shea, a first year senior, recorded his second win of the year with a 5-7, 6-0, 6-4 victory over the Green Wave's ace, sophomore Eric Goldman. Goldman's looping shots threw off the tempo of the hard hitting Shea in the first set, but he was able to recover, adjust, and beat out his counterpart for the win.

At second singles, senior captain Christopher Golden remained undefeated, blanking junior David Bognanno 6-0, 6-0. Golden's height proved to be extremely effective against the shorter Bognanno, as his skillful rushes to the net were consistently successful.

Senior Casey Brewer, also a first year player, played his first ever singles match, losing 6-0, 6-1 for Cohasset's only loss of the day.

Skipper first doubles maintained their season long unbeaten streak, as senior captain Jeff Scribner and sophomore David Ingber handled Abington's senior-sophomore tandem of Bryan Serino and Josh DeSieno, 6-0, 6-3.

Junior Joe Niessink paired up with freshman Robbie Carpenter at second doubles, as his strength complimented Carpenter's consistency very well for a 6-3, 6-4 victory.

The win ran the boys record to 3-1, and a three match winning streak after the season opening 3-2 loss in Hanover.

The Skippers will get another crack at the Indians this Friday, at home at 3:30.

Girls tennis report

Meanwhile, back in Cohasset, the girls team improved to 5-0 with their win over the Green Wave, and this one was never in doubt.

First singles player sophomore Lindsay Grossman continued her domination of her opponents with a 6-0, 6-1 shellacking. Grossman effectively combined power with grace. She has yet to have her serve broken this year.

Sophomore second singles player Julie Shea beat up on her opposition as well, with a 6-1, 6-2, nothing new for the fantastic underclassmen.

Third singles did not go as smoothly, but ended with the same result, a Cohasset win, this time by senior captain Aryanna Afshar. Similar to Erik Shea, Afshar's style of play was disrupted in the first set, with Abington winning 6-2. But Afshar battled back with a 6-1 second set win, and finished her off with a 6-2 clincher.

First doubles, the new team of junior captain Kelly Stone and freshman Courtney Caron combined the experience of Stone with the shocking power of Caron. The Cohasset tandem needed only two quick sets to get a point for their team.

Second doubles did get the two set loss, with sophomores Nicole Needle and Kelly Holway in action. Holway is still recovering from a shoulder injury she sustained earlier this year, and it is believed she re-injured it in the match.

Laxers bounce back

After first loss of season, boys lacrosse team gets past Hanover despite spotty effort

The Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team improved its record to 6-1, and 4-1 in the Pilgrim League, stomping Hanover 21-9 at Alumni Field on Tuesday evening. The Skippers were led by senior co-captain Ronan Buick's six goals and seven assists, and by junior attackman Paul Previte's four goals and an assist.

Cohasset scored three goals in the first two minutes of the game, then struggled for the rest of the first quarter, leading only 4-2 at its end. But an eight-goal second period and six-goal third quarter blew the contest open, allowing Coach Kevin Orcutt to empty his bench in the final stanza.

"We won, but we can't feel good about this victory," said Orcutt. "Hanover lacks the skills and the approach to the game to be competitive in this league, yet we allowed them to score nine goals. It was our worst defensive performance of the season, and almost beyond the coaching staff's comprehension. We'll have to be better for Norwell."

Other Cohasset scorers included junior attackman Eric Libby with three goals and an assist, sophomore attackman Curt Kahn with a goal and three assists, junior attackman Jason Moore with a pair of goals, and soph midfielder Matt Davis and freshman attackman Mike Devine with a goal apiece. Devine's score was his first as a varsity player. Senior co-captain Lane Forrer chipped in with an assist, and an excellent effort at both ends of the field.

Junior goalie Kyle Weber played the first three quarters, making five saves while allowing seven goals. Freshman Nick Murphy took over in the final period, stopping five shots while allowing a pair of scores.

Orcutt's disappointment in this game carried over from the Skippers previous performance, a 10-6 setback to Falmouth on Friday night at home, the team's first and only loss of the season.

Previte's hat trick wasn't enough to prevent the boys from falling from the ranks of the unbeaten before a large, vocal crowd at Alumni Stadium.

In a match-up of two teams ranked in the state's top 10 by the national laxpower.com ranking service, the Div. 1 Clippers were a little stronger and a lot more consistent than the Div. 2 Skippers, outscoring Cohasset 4-1 over the final six and a half minutes of the game.

"Falmouth's the best team we've played to date," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "This was a good reality check for us. We can see what we need to do to beat a team like this, because Falmouth did that to us. They controlled the pace of the game, came at us with a level of defensive intensity that we hadn't seen before, and played with great heart when we made our run in the third and the start of the fourth quarter."

With just over a minute gone in the last period, Cohasset closed to 6-5 behind Davis' goal on a feed from Moore. The Skippers then squandered a two-man advantage, and Falmouth ran off four unanswered goals in three-and-a-half minutes to nail down the win. Previte scored Cohasset's final goal with a minute and a half to play.

Besides Davis and Previte, who had an assist to go with his three goals, Cohasset got a pair of scores from Buick. Falmouth coach Greg Gilbert, after the game, credited his defenders with holding Buick to five points below his scoring average as one of the keys to the Cape Codders' victory.

Goalie Kyle Weber had 10 saves for the home team. His counterpart, sophomore Scott Truax, had 20.

"Individually, we had some exceptional efforts," said Orcutt. "Nick Spirito (Sophomore longstick midfielder) was outstanding, and Previte certainly came to play. Matt Davis had a strong second half and an important goal. Freshman Conor Buick did well in the second half on defense. But we'll only beat good opponents with better team play."

The Skippers travel to Norwell on Friday for a 3:30 rematch with their Pilgrim rivals. Cohasset then plays a non-league contest at Walpole on Saturday, with the faceoff now set for 4 pm. On Tuesday, May 8, the Skippers travel to Hingham for a much anticipated league match-up of the two teams currently ranked at the top of Division Two in the state.

Speed and agility training

The Cohasset Recreation Department is pleased to announce a speed and agility training program for youngsters ages 9 to 14 and 14 to19 years.

The five-week program will meet twice weekly, on Monday and Wednesday evenings, from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. at Miliken Field, starting Monday, June 25, through Wednesday, July 25..

The cost for this unique, all-sports speed and agility training program is $85 for the 10 session program.

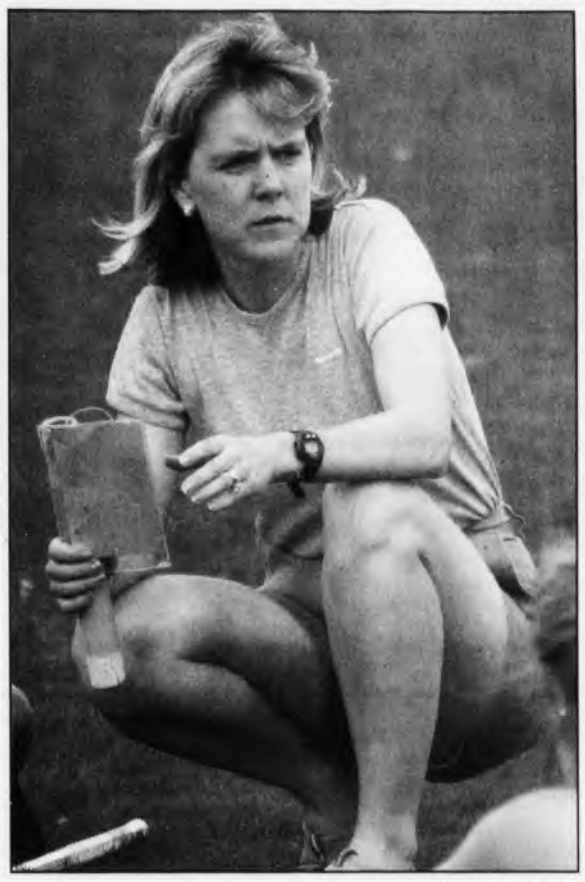
Early registration is advised as the clinics must be size restricted and further information is available, along with registration, at the Cohasset Recreation Department, 1st floor, Town Hall, or at 383-4109.

Lady Skippers fall to .500

With back-to-back losses, laxers stand at 3-3-1

The Cohasset girls varsity lacrosse team split two games last week after their return from spring vacation, but fell in their first game this week to drop to .500 (3-3-1) on the season.

Cohasset 11, Medfield 4



Buoyed by the return from injuries of junior co-captain Carlie Carter, Cohasset played a solid game against Medfield in their first 2001 action on Alumni Field on April 24th. Junior second home Kristin Sheerin opened up the scoring with two quick goals on dodges from behind to give Cohasset an early 2-0 lead. Emma Gardner increased the Cohasset lead with a beautiful quick stick goal on an assist from Kate Grimm.

After their quick start, the Lady Skippers never looked back. Once again Sheerin (3 goals) and sophomore first home Sera Genovese (3 goals) led the Cohasset scoring charge. Sophomore center Maura McKenney had an outstanding game, winning numerous draws and chipping in two goals. Emma Gardner (2 goals), Kate Grimm (1 goal, 1 assist) and Rachel Smith (2 assists) all contributed to a balanced Cohasset attack.

The Cohasset defense was rock solid throughout the game, never letting Medfield gain any momentum. Time and time again, Julie Lordan thwarted Medfield's fast breaks with good, aggressive positioning. Coach Kathy Guadiano credited the defense with setting the tone for the game.

"We beat Medfield to nearly every ground ball and used our overall team speed to great advantage," said the coach.

Gia Petrakis was again outstanding in goal, recording 13 saves.

Sandwich 15, Cohasset 3

The long bus ride to the Cape was not kind to the Lady Skippers last Thursday. Perennial tournament favorite Sandwich proved too much for the young Cohasset squad and dominated the game from start to finish. Kristin Sheerin again led Cohasset in scoring with two goals. Maura McKenney had a goal and Kate Grimm an assist in the losing effort.

Scituate 11, Cohasset 7

Despite another strong effort from Sheerin (5 goals), the lady Skippers fell on Tuesday to Scituate. Sera Genovese and Nicole Turgiss each scored once for Cohasset.

Cohasset next plays Marshfield at home on Thursday (3:30 start).

Meet the Cohasset Sailing Club vice commodores

As the Cohasset Community Sailing Club gears up for the 2001 summer season, residents are invited to participate in the programs offered at the club. This year the club decided to shift the organizational structure to include more vice commodores in order to better respond to the needs of the community. All of the vice commodores have served the program in various capacities. There are five vice commodores who head up the operation of the club, they are Ann Musto of Lantern Lane, Sandy Crough of Forest Street, Bob Cunningham of Norfolk Road, Brian Connors of South Main Street and Peter Pescatore of Lantern Lane.

Although Musto, vice commodore for children's programs, grew up on the water and sailed as a kid, what she likes about the sailing club is you don't have to be a hotshot sailor to join.

"It is a great activity to bring the family together. Your children can take you sailing which will help build self-confidence and independence," she says.

• Ann Musto — Served for 10 years as clerk. Served as vice commodore for the children's program for last two years. She elevated the safety requirements for instructors where they are required to be "US Level 1 Sailors," a requirement many sailing clubs do not have. She also instituted a sailing director position (Torin Sweeney) to provide direction to the club activities on a daily basis. Musto brings tremendous creativity to the club. She has great organizational experience and strong leadership qualities.

• Peter Pescatore — Served five years as treasurer. He is responsible for all tax filings, processing of membership and training applications, payroll for staff and making budget recommendations. Pescatore puts in more work than any other volunteer and his busiest time is now when all of the applications start flooding in.

• Brian Connors — Responsible for one of the most physically challenging jobs of the vice commodores — all upkeep and physical operations. Connors is responsible for putting in the docks, painting the boats and the general aesthetics of the club.

• Sandy Crough — In charge of social activities for the sailing club. She will oversee the children's fun day, opening and closing ceremonies, and other events. She also will coordinate things such as trophies and staff shirts and is planning a series of child/adult races, followed by barbecues. This is the second year she has held this position. Crough, a mother of three, has been a member "on and off" for 20 years.

• Bob Cunningham — Primarily responsible for the junior racing program. He likes the junior racing program because it doesn't matter how big, how strong or how much money you have spent on your equipment, everyone has a fair chance of winning. "It is one of the only sports in which girls can compete successfully against boys in any class of boats or age group. Many of the top junior sailors in the country are girls and that can be quite a lesson for both sexes," he says.

Clark Chatterton to be remembered at Relay

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Irony waved its unfair hand at the Relay for Life last year.

Clark Chatterton was unable to attend last year's events due to complications with cancer. It was the first time he had missed the event he helped bring to Cohasset.

"It was one of his priorities from day one when the idea for the relay first came up," said Clark's wife, Sallyann. "He supported it wholeheartedly."

The Relay for Life is a nationwide event that features teams of walkers which raise money for cancer research, education and services for patients and families. Last year the event raised $168 million from 2,700 events across the country. In New England, 89 relay events raised more than $9 million.

This year's event will be held from Friday, May 18 at 3 p.m. until Saturday May 19, at noon, at Alumni Field.

Clark brought the relay to Cohasset in 1998, and Sallyann said at the end of the event's first year, her husband looked at a picture taken at the event and remarked how he was the only one cancer-free. Clark was diagnosed shortly after, and despite chemotherapy treatments, was always able to get the event together and participate in the Survivor's Lap – until last year.

"I can't say enough about how strongly he felt about this event," said Sallyann.

Last year Clark got a new cancer survivor, Ann Marie Goff, to form a team and participate.

"He said, 'Ann Marie you've got to come out to the meetings and get involved.' And we'd meet up and go together." Goff remembered.

Goff thought it only right that she form a team in Clark's honor. "This year someone asked who's having a team for Clark, and nobody was, so I said I'd do it," she said. "I just think it's important to have a team for him."

She said she expects 'Clark's Energizers' to be 40 people strong, one of the largest teams at the event, and easily raise more than last year's total of $5,400.

"I think a lot of people that are on the team wants to raise money because they're doing it for Clark," she said.

On the team will be Sallyann, her two children and two grandchildren.

Ann Marie Goff will lead 'Clark's Energizers' expected to to be 40 people strong at this year's Relay.

"It's going to be very hard thing, but we feel as though we have to be there," Sallyann said.

She said the entire family will also be present at 9 p.m. during the luminaria lighting ceremony, which they will lead. Participants can buy a luminary in memory of someone who has died of cancer. The candles are placed around the track, which is part of the athletic complex that bears Clark'sname. The Clark Chatterton Athletic Complex was unveiled at this past year's Thanksgiving Day football game.

"It absolutely will be emotional," said Goff.

Last year Goff said she wasn't able to stay for all 21 hours of the event, but hopes to accomplish that this year. "I'm really looking forward to this year," she said. "I'm well, and can stay up all night. I'm psyched about it."

Clark Chatterton was named the Cohasset Mariner Citizen of the Year, months before he succumbed to cancer. He was the middle/high school athletic director for decades and ran the concession stand at the South Shore Music Circus, as well as guiding the first few years of the relay in Cohasset.

"He was a great fundraiser,"Sallyann said. "His goal was to see the totals up and people having more fun, and making great strides towards fighting cancer."

Luminaria offered

A special luminaria ceremony held during the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset remembers those who have lost the fight to cancer and honors those who have survived. Luminaria candles will be lit at Cohasset High School, May 18 at 9 p.m. to represent those individuals. All members of the local community are invited to the ceremony, regardless of whether or not they are participating in the actual relay event. Anyone desiring to purchase a luminaria candle may do so by calling the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880. A minimum donation of $5 is asked for each luminaria candle.

LIBRARY CORNER

Children's Room

A free series of programs for preschoolers, ages 3-5, begins this spring at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. This will be a combination of entertaining performances, beginning Friday, May 4, and continuing through Saturday, June 9.

Big Ryan, storyteller, leads off the pre-school program Friday, May 4, at 10 a.m. and again Thursday, May 10, at 2 p.m.

The Music Lady joins the library Saturday, May 12, at 4 p.m. and once again Saturday, June 9, at 10:30 a.m. All programs are sponsored by South Shore Community Action and "Helping Children Have Success Now."

Sound Box books

These new editions, by Jane Belk Moncure, continue the Sound Box tradition by building young readers' confidence, expanding their vocabularies and inspiring a love of reading. Paul Pratt Memorial Library now offers these books, set up in a special book area near the children's librarian's desk.

All books are updated to reflect current educational standards and continue beginning readers to cheer, "I can read them all by myself."

Call the children's library at 781-383-1348.

WORSHIP NOTES

First Eucharist

First Eucharist will be celebrated at St. Anthony Parish Saturday, May 12, at 10:30 a.m. and 1 p.m. Preparation for First Eucharist is a two-year process that ordinarily begins in grade one. Each child is requested to bring a medium-size plant to the final practice, and one parent must attend that practice. Practices are: Teams 1-4, Friday, May 4, Tuesday, May 8 and Thursday, May 10, 3:45 to 5 p.m.; Teams 5-7, Monday, May 7, Wednesday, May 9 and Friday, May 11, 3:45 to 5 p.m.

Also, the Archdiocesan Cardinal's Appeal will be held this weekend, May 5 and 6. This is an annual fundraiser that serves more than two million people in 144 cities and 368 parishes throughout the Archdiocese of Boston. Programs supported by the appeal help people in all phases of life. More than 80 agencies, programs and ministries provide food and shelter, educate children and adults, meet spiritual needs and support the clergy. Parishioners are asked to mail in an appeal pledge card, which can be picked up at the church.

This Sunday is also Food Pantry Sunday. Contributions of non-perishable goods can be dropped off at the church after all Masses.

Honoring teachers

The young men/young women of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, ages 12 to 18, have invited some of their favorite, some 35 (public school) teachers, to honor with a dinner and program Tuesday, May 8, at the church meeting house, 379 Gardner St., Hingham, at 6:30 p.m. The youth come from all over the South Shore area.

Rebecca Lambert of Norwell is president of the group.

Mitzvah Day

Congregation Sha'aray Shalom, 1112 Main St., Hingham invites the public to celebrate its fifth annual Social Action Day, Sunday, May 6, beginning with bagels, pastry and drinks at 8:30 a.m. and concluding with a community-wide barbecue from 12:30 p.m. until 2 p.m.

The event is more familiarly known as Mitzvah Day. Helping others is among the most fundamental of all Jewish virtues.

You can also sign up for the Walk for Hunger. Walkers will meet in the temple parking lot, travel to Boston by bus, walk for about 2.2 miles, and be back in time for the barbecue at 12:30. If you want to stay closer to home, you can clean up at a Scituate beach, help create a blooming garden right at the temple or walk over to the Mary Martha Learning Center and help the folks there spruce up for spring. All activities originate at Congregation Sha'aray Shalom.

Glastonbury series

The event is Thursday, May 3, at 7:15 p.m., at Glastonbury Abbey, Hingham, and is sponsored by The Benedictine community of Glastonbury Abbey.

In this sixth and final presentation of The Glastonbury Series, 2000-2001, "Listening to Other Voices: the Way of Prayer in Our Religious Traditions," Dr. Michael McFadden focuses on the impact upon individuals, families and communities of the spirituality of the 12-step approach to addiction recovery. McFadden has been working with families for more than 40 years. In addition to being a Certified Addictions specialist, McFadden is also a Licensed Mental Health Counselor and Marriage and Family Therapist. He also trains those who serve on Marriage Preparation Teams. He is president of Family Focus Associates Inc., Hull, a counseling and education center which seeks to strengthen family life by imparting skills which are not necessarily taught in schools. McFadden graduated from Villanova University and holds a Doctorate in Ministry to Marriage and Family from Eastern Baptist Theological in Philadelphia.

The 10-second scene at the beginning of the movie shows a funeral procession driving past a bake sale with children playing on the grass.

By 10 a.m., the extras were in costume, waiting for the shoot to start, in the cool shadow of First Parish Church. The film crew set up the bake-sale table, complete with period ice chests and coolers. A half-dozen black, brown and green Cadillac's practiced their slow procession around the common.

A little after 11 a.m., the cars, camera truck and extras were cued up and practiced their synchronized movements. After three practice takes, the snow was brought in, bake-sale table moved around, and the extras — not to mention their parents watching along Highland Avenue — waited for actual filming to begin.

Just beyond the time-warped scene on the common, waited SUVs, land rovers, prop trucks, Teamsters and other spectators.

Joyce Davis of Weymouth was working in one of the houses along North Main Street while filming was going on. She said the cast and crew were on site getting people ready when she arrived at 8:30 in the morning.

"It's really cool," she said, as another parade of cars drove by. "I'm kind of glued to the window."

Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson said while filming was going on, officers blocked off access to Highland Avenue from Beach Street, and detoured traffic up Depot Court and down Ripley Road.

Movie extras run along the town common as a line of 70s-vintage cars forms a funeral procession along North Main Street during Tuesday's movie filming.

The movie is the third major motion picture to be filmed, at least partly, in Cohasset. The first was 1987's "Witches of Eastwick," starring Sarandon, Jack Nicholson, Michelle Pfeiffer, and Cher. In 1992, "Housesitter" starring Steve Martin and Goldie Hawn, came to town for a few weeks to film some scenes around the downtown and common areas. Cohasset has also provided the setting for several TV commercials and smaller films.

Disney originally was interested in filming at the Central Cemetery, but chose to shoot the scene in Gloucester.

Set in a fictional New England town named "Cape Anne" in the early 1970s, the unlikely love story revolves around a young man (Jake Gyllenhaal, "October Sky") who finds himself lingering in the family home of his fiancee after her accidental death. While grieving along with her parents (Hoffman and Sarandon) and drawn into the legal issues presented by a district attorney, played by Holly Hunter, seeking justice for the family, Joe finds himself falling in love with another woman (newcomer Ellen Pompeo), against his own best intentions. Once filming on the North Shore wraps up, the crew will head back to Los Angeles for additional scenes.

The film's title, "Baby's in Black," is also the name of a song written by John Lennon and Paul McCartney (recorded by the Beatles in 1964) which echoes the theme of a new love haunted by the memory of an old love.

Former state senator to lead runway fight

such as T.F. Greene in Providence, Hanscom Field in Bedford and the newly refurbished Worcester Airport.

But Massport Executive Director Virginia Buckingham, speaking before the Legislature last week, touted the airport's new $500,000 ad campaign encouraging passengers to use regional airports.

"We have stepped up to the plate and done more than any other airport in the United States to promote regionalization," Buckingham said.

She called the proposed runway "the only solution" to meeting Logan's growth demands and said it will eliminate, not increase, pollution by clearing circling planes from the sky and idling aircraft from the tarmac.

Buckingham also expressed hope the agency can focus on completing the project rather than battling legal challenges.

"I'd rather spend Massport's money on mitigating the growth at Logan than on lawyers," she said.

But Golden, who served as state senator from the Plymouth-Norfolk District from 1985-1991, said the towns are on the right side of this issue.

"It's fundamental to the future quality of life in the towns and it's fundamental to the democratic process that we insist on having a public process in which the average citizen and elected official have an opportunity for meaningful input."

FILE PHOTO

Bill Golden

The proposed runway is embroiled in federal and state environmental studies, dubbed the MEPA and NEPA process. Golden hopes that's where it will stop.

"We're hopeful that state Sec. (Robert) Durand and FAA administrator Jane Garvey will look at this closely and see that any fair-minded person would realize this is a hoax and act accordingly."

Golden says the solution to delays at Logan is to institute "peak pricing" that was tried successfully during the Dukakis administration. With peak pricing, airlines pay extra to land and take off at peak times.

"Up to 35 planes are scheduled leave at exactly the same minute, several times a day. With peak pricing, if you want to leave with everyone else you have to pay a fee," he explained "The effect is the flights are spread out and there would be a reduction in delay overnight." (A flight is considered to have "left" once the passengers are on board and the doors closed). Logan is currently sixth in the country on the list of delay-prone airports.

Massport should also allow people to use its express shuttle to other regional airports such as Providence, Golden said.

Mary Ann Frye, an alternate member of the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, said Golden is just the right person to lead the Logan fight.

"The current Massport staff depends on getting the public to take its PR spin on the runway as fact," she said. "Bill cuts right through it. He changes the terms of the argument. He has a lucid picture of the real agenda at Logan which he lays out for all to see."

Village merchants want to curb one-way traffic trial

n't. We're not changing it permanently. We just want to give it a try."

The CRC is a private, non-profit group, funded mainly by wealthy businessman Peter Roy, with an eye on making improvements to the village and harbor areas. Roy lives on Margin Street and owns both Atlantica and Kimball's by the Sea. CRC hired The Cecil Group and BSC Engineering to analyze the village area, and make recommendations on how to improve it. Any decision must first be approved by the task fore, then selectmen, and finally, a Town Meeting vote.

The one-way traffic plan calls for all southbound traffic (towards Scituate) to be diverted down South Main Street. Northbound traffic (towards the common) will be detoured down Brook Street, and then back north along Elm Street.

But Roukounakis doesn't see any point in giving it a try.

"All these businesses are going to get hurt," he said. "I don't want to try it at all. It's useless. It's going to make it worse for us."

Rizzo said in a recent letter sent to village businesses that the change would ease traffic congestion through the village, and provide more room for passing cars and deliveries, wider sidewalks, plantings and other streetscape amenities. Rizzo also said "businesses along South Main, Elm and Brook Streets may see a resulting increase in exposure in the long run."

However, many village businesses can't see any positives from the change. They say forcing cars to turn down Brook Street, followed by a left onto Elm Street and a sharp left back onto South Main Street will drive away business.

"I'm going to lose people coming from the harbor and Scituate. They're going to have to loop around, and they're not going to do that," said Roukounakis.

"We're very unhappy with it," said French Memories owner Anne Gabanelle. "We've been here 10 years and know how the business works. The change is not good."

Gabanelle said her store does a good morning business thanks to commuters stopping in for coffee or an early snack. "In order to come here people will have to go twice around the block both coming and leaving…One month of business is a lot."

Cohasset News owner John Scott was blunt. "I don't like it," he said. "There's no need for it. There's no benefits."

Scott, who has owned the store for 10 years, said he thinks everyone will park in his lot and then just walk over to whatever store they are going to. "I don't think it's worth it," he said about the change. "I don't think they should do it."

Also at issue with the village merchants was how the decision was made. Selectmen gave initial approval to the trial period at their April 24 meeting, with no testimony from village business owners.

"There was no opposition at the meeting," said Roukounakis. "They didn't make an announcement, like it was a secret. It's kind of fishy."

Gabanelle said the village merchants are usually told about all meeting involving the CRC and any of their proposals, and was disappointed in both the town and the CRC for not notifying them. She also was upset that the town would consider something so drastic, especially when it has been so fiercely opposed by the businesses it would affect. "All we wanted was some was some new sidewalks, lights and trees."

Roukounakis said not only will merchants be at the May 8 selectmen's meeting, where the board is expected to take a final vote on whether to try the one-way pattern, but they will come ready to battle. "We are going to argue about it," he said. "It's our last chance to say something."

Selectmen chairman Fred Koed said the board will take any concerns village merchants may have seriously before making a final decision.

"I think most of the selectmen would look at downtown businesses as fairly fragile in some sense, and be concerned about how any changes would impact them," he said. " It will be a big meeting in the sense that we want people to come down and talk and tell us their concerns."

Koed said the trial period is just to see if a one-way traffic plan could improve safety and traffic circulation around the village, without driving businesses away.

"Right now the village task force has recommended a trial and the selectmen have tentatively asked them to come up with a plan and describe how the change would be implemented and then put back. Then we have to figure out how to analyze what happened," he said. "If the merchants' concerns are real, then we'll have to look at leaving things the way they are."

The duck stops here

Admiral Duck musters for kids parties

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Mickey Mouse. Big Bird. Bugs Bunny.

Paul Madden doesn't give a quack about any of those guys. He's invented his own lively, humorous character who goes by the name of Admiral Duck.

Madden, of Weymouth, said Admiral Duck was a character which essentially came out of all of his life experiences, but he cannot say for sure. All Madden knows is that donning his Admiral Duck costume and entertaining kids is the way he makes his living now that he is retired—and he's loving every minute of it.

"I never planned this or anything," Madden said. "But in the last couple of years since I retired, I've been giving this my best."

The Admiral Duck costume is extravagant, consisting of a dark-blue Navy jacket lined with nautically-based decor and adorned with silver and gold trim. The Admiral's hat is almost colonial, topped with a large tuft of feathers. But the Admiral is only part of the act, Madden said. He also uses two puppets —humorous cohorts—the devious and trouble-making Mickey the monkey, and also, No-Name, a shy woodland creature who doesn't talk.

"I called him No-Name because I really don't know what he is," Madden said of the mute puppet.

"I can't tell you where all these personalities come from," he said, "but I'm having a blast. This is something I want to get very good at, because I'm planning on doing this for as long as I can. There are other people out there who do other characters, most of them more famous than Admiral Duck. But those people will usually stay at a birthday party or other function for five minutes and it'll cost you $75. With me, you get 20 minutes and it'll only cost $50."

Madden said he's getting the routine down pat. At a given party, he'll come into a room full of kids, and start getting them involved in reading one of his personally-scripted maritime adventure stories. In short, he dazzles children with an amazing literary trip and then makes them laugh with the puppets, who indeed provide a great deal of the comic relief. After he goes through his act, he leaves immediately.

"I try to have that 'Who was that masked man?' effect happen," Madden said of the Admiral Duck act. "One thing I've learned is that it's important not to break out of character. That just ends up breaking the mystique. You get in there, you entertain, and you get out. That makes a much better impression."

"One thing I've learned is that it's important not to break out of character. That just ends up breaking the mystique. You get in there, you entertain, and you get out. That makes a much better impression."
Paul Madden, a.k.a. Admiral Duck

Madden said what he is doing today is the result of a life of many different experiences, good and bad. It all started when he joined the Quincy Police Department in 1969.

"During that time, I was playing a lot of drums," Madden said, adding he played gigs in a lot of local clubs with many different bands. But one night, Madden said he was asked to sing given the absence of a vocalist, but he had no idea what song to do.

"A lady in the club had brought in a Sesame Street album that night, and there was a song on it called 'Rubber Duckie.' What else could I do? The band started playing it, and I started playing drums and singing it. For the next few weeks, all people in the club could say was 'Where is that Rubber Duckie drummer? That's how I got labeled."

Even his colleagues on the police force eventually heard of Madden's crooning. When a sergeant addressed him as "Rubber Duckie" during a roll call, he knew the word was out. For the next 25 years, he never got away from the nickname.

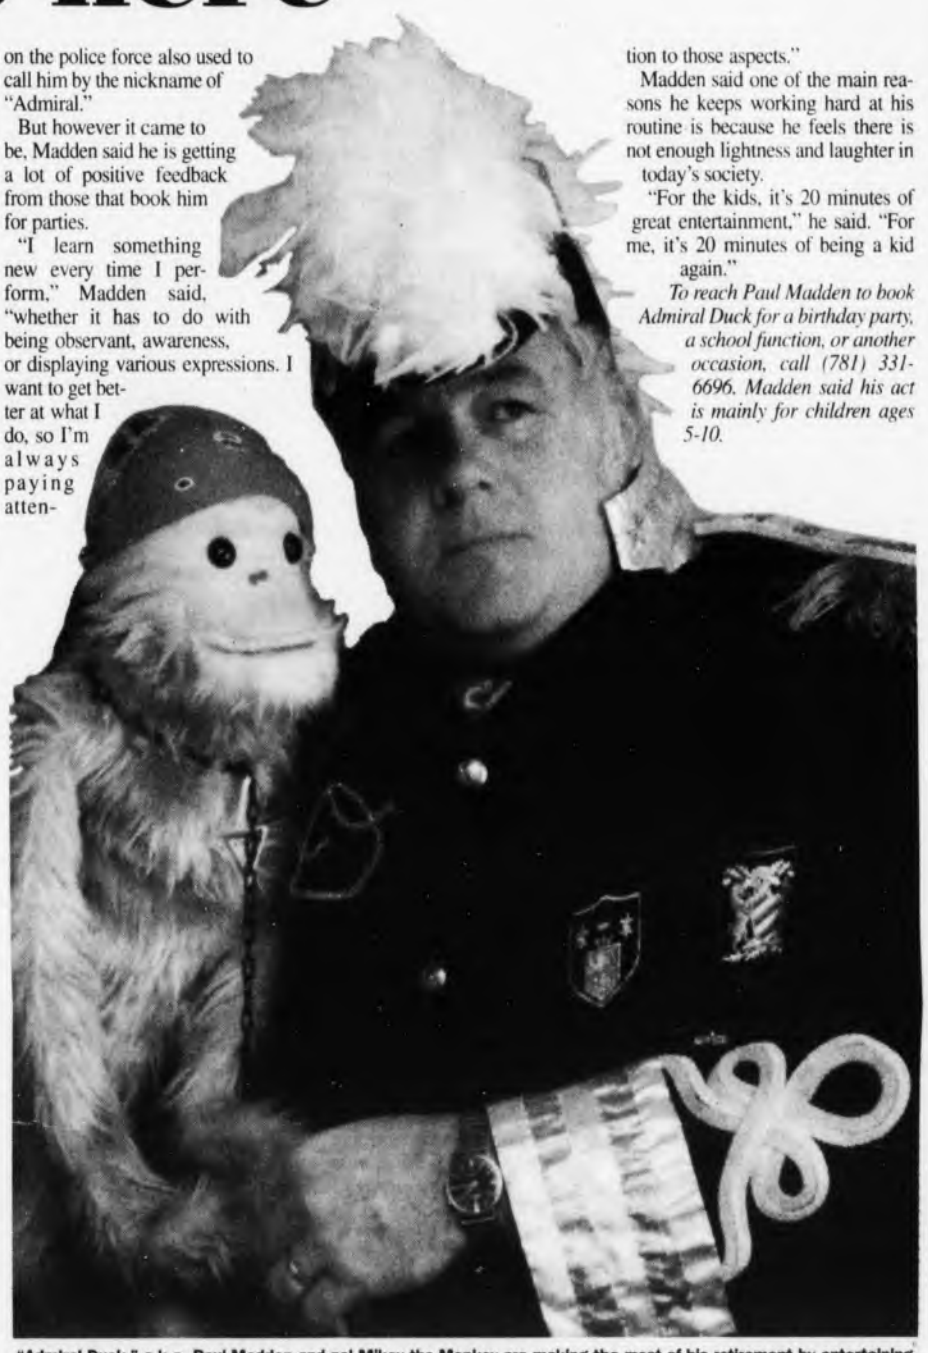
During the 1970s, Madden was also doing some stand-up comedy in local clubs, but the material he was offering up was not for children's ears. In 1975, he bought some puppets, including Mickey the Monkey and No-Name, and he started learning how to use them, because he wanted to work them into his routine.

By 1985, the burden of police work, playing music in clubs, and doing stand-up comedy were "getting out of hand," Madden said. By the mid-1990s, Madden decided to quit the music and the stand-up, and he dedicated himself to learning more about puppet techniques, ventriloquism, and how to clean up some of his racier comedic stylings.

"When I was nearing retirement, I started getting really serious about coming up with some sort of routine," Madden said. "Now, it's my life." Madden said he retired in 1996, and stressed since then, he has been working to make his routine the best it can be.

"Like I said, I couldn't tell you where these personalities came from," he said. "I think a lot of my act is based on all the time I spent being a cop. I've seen a lot of highs and lows in my life, and I drew out of those experiences. I think my act has a lot to do with balancing good and bad, and also overcoming conflict."

He said his act may also be based on one of the characters in one of his many poems named Andrew the Duck. He added that his colleagues on the police force also used to call him by the nickname of "Admiral."



But however it came to be, Madden said he is getting a lot of positive feedback from those that book him for parties.

"I learn something new every time I perform," Madden said, "whether it has to do with being observant, awareness, or displaying various expressions. I want to get better at what I do, so I'm always paying attention to those aspects."

Madden said one of the main reasons he keeps working hard at his routine is because he feels there is not enough lightness and laughter in today's society.

"For the kids, it's 20 minutes of great entertainment," he said. "For me, it's 20 minutes of being a kid again."

To reach Paul Madden to book Admiral Duck for a birthday party, a school function, or another occasion, call (781) 331-6696. Madden said his act is mainly for children ages 5-10.

"Admiral Duck," a.k.a. Paul Madden and pal Mikey the Monkey are making the most of his retirement by entertaining at children's parties.

She leaves 'em laughing

Braintree CPA has the comic touch

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Annette Pollack

By day, Annette Pollack works as a CPA at a company in Braintree, but by night, she enjoys making people fall of their chairs with laughter.

Pollack has been a stand-up comedian for the past nine years. She hosts her own comedy show at Jimbo's Restaurant in Braintree on the third Thursday of every month where locally-based and even renowned comics take the stage.

Pollack often performs there as well, but said her main duties include finding the talent and putting the show together. But Pollack still finds time to offer up her own brand of stand-up comedy at local clubs around the area. So far, she hasn't gotten sick of the routine.

"I still love doing comedy," Pollack said. "I haven't gotten bitter, and I haven't gotten jaded."

But why would she? Her show at Jimbo's has become an extremely popular event on the South Shore — the last two shows were sellouts.

Pollack, a Braintree resident, said her love of comedy began in the early 1980s. She said she frequently traveled to different clubs in the Boston area to catch area comedians like Steven Wright. But Pollack did not find herself involved in the comedy scene until 1992, after her father passed away.

"I don't know what it was, but something inside me clicked," Pollack said. "After my Dad died, a friend of mine who was a comedian said I should take this comedy-writing course, and I did."

The eight-week course was held at the Boston Center for Adult Education, and after she completed it, Pollack was offered a five-minute spot at Nick's Comedy Stop in Boston. At first, people didn't find Pollack so funny.

"I bombed so bad," she said of the Nick's gig, "I said I'd never do it again after that."

But she changed her mind. Pollack started getting onstage more and more at different Boston-based clubs like the Comedy Connection and the Comedy Vault. She also began working for Dick Doherty Comedy Productions in Woburn.

Soon, she found herself with a polished stand-up act and a knack for being naturally funny. In 1993, Pollack founded the Jimbo's show, but she also kept herself busy with other gigs over the years. She has played benefit shows, colleges, and in clubs all around New England.

In 1995, she found herself with one of the lead roles in the famous play Joey and Maria's Italian Comedy Wedding, and began broadening her range with behind-the -scenes work on movies like "Celtic Pride."

But her first love is comedy and making people laugh. Pollack has worked with and been influenced by great comedians like Steve Sweeney, John Pinnette, Kevin Knox, Paul Nardizzi, Jim Lauletta and even Marshfield-based funny man Tommy Dunham.

"My routine today focuses on life, growing up in my family, and other kinds of perceptual stuff," she said. "My act is really about getting the audience involved in what I'm doing because you need to have a response. Without the audience, there is no show."

Pollack said her act is also composed of a lot of improvisation, a talent which she said she was born with. But she also gets her material by just paying attention to the world around her.

"I'm always looking for material," she said. "I get a lot of what I talk about by reading the paper. When you're trying to think of a joke, you want to come up with the premise first, not the punchline."

Pollack said she tackles all sorts of subjects in addition to her family life, from other personal matters to more worldly matters like trips into space.

"Remember a while back, NASA sent a billion-dollar spaceship to go photograph Mars?," she quipped. "Remember? And they lost the f@#&ing thing? How do you lose a spaceship? Well, they eventually found it in Brockton…stripped for parts."

It is not too often that Pollack finds herself at a loss for material, or words for that matter.

Pollack said even though balancing her career at Harley-O'Neill & Company in Braintree and maintaining her comedy act is tough, she never gets tired of providing people with some good old-fashioned humor.

"For me, it's about having a good show and making people crack up," she said. "When I get off stage, and I know people were laughing and having a good time, I get a high off that. Laughter really is the best medicine, and in this day and age, people have got to get out and loosen up."

The next four shows at Jimbo's Restaurant will be held on May 3 (with Tommy Dunham), May 24, June 14, and June 28. All shows begin at 8:30 p.m.. For more information call Jimbo's at (781) 848-0300 or log onto www.Jimbossouth.com.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Back by popular demand. The ricotta cheesecake recipe below was cut off the first time it was run April 18. After fielding a dozen calls from readers we are re-running the recipe in full.

For some cookbook authors, ricotta cheesecake is nothing more than a New York style cheesecake with the addition of ricotta along with a few standard flavorings such as pine nuts, orange zest, and rum-soaked raisins. In my opinion, however, a really good ricotta cheesecake allows the unique texture of the ricotta to shine through by not drowning it in a cream-laden, custardy bath.

I started with a few guidelines. I wanted to use an 8-inch spring form pan (some recipes use odd sizes such as 6-inch pans) and I wanted to keep the recipe as simple as possible. I made four recipes to start, one each from Lidia Bastianich, Nick Malgieri, Carol Field, and one from the "New Joy of Cooking." The differences were remarkable. Carl Field uses heavy cream and sour cream in addition to the ricotta, Joy uses almost double the sugar plus chocolate chips, and there was no consensus about the number of eggs and whether or not the whites should be beaten separately.

The first issue to resolve was that of the eggs. Using 1 1/2 pounds of ricotta, I found that 5 eggs produced a custardy cake, 3 eggs produced something akin to a cannoli filling, but 4 eggs was just right. I tried separating them and whipping the whites but the resulting texture was on the dry side. However, when I separated only two of the eggs, I found the texture preferable. It was slightly drier and less "wet," an unpleasant feature of many ricotta cheesecakes.

Next, I tried adding 1/4 pound cream cheese to the mixture and I found that the cake was pleasantly creamy. (The cream cheese has to be beaten with the sugar, not just added to the egg mixture, to properly blend it with the batter.) However, the addition of sour cream was unwelcome due to the added tang and both sour cream and heavy cream resulted in a texture which was too wet.

I then sorted through all of the flavoring ingredients. Chocolate chips were revolting, cinnamon was equally odd and overpowering, and pine nuts and raisins simply complicated the recipe without improving it. Orange zest, lemon zest, dark rum, and vanilla were a nice combination – simple and flavorful.

For baking times, I started with 375 degrees which was a disaster – the center was puffy and cracked. At 350 degrees, the cheesecake was good but a bit on the wet side. I then tried a water bath which took forever and also produced a damp slice of cake. Finally, taking a cue from one of the test recipes, I started the oven at 375 degrees and then finished at 325 degrees. I did find, however, that an extra 10 minutes or so in the oven produced a drier texture which I preferred. For those who are seeking a truly moist, almost wet interior, simply bake this cake 55 to 60 minutes instead of the 65 minutes recommended by the recipe below.

RICOTTA CHEESECAKE

I like a relatively dry ricotta cheesecake and that is why I suggest a relatively long baking time. If you prefer a moister, wetter slice of cheesecake, bake the cake a total of 55 to 60 minutes instead of the 65 minutes suggested below. With the longer baking time, the top of the cake will crack which I do not find objectionable.

4 large eggs at room temperature
4 ounces cream cheese at room temperature
11 tablespoons sugar
Finely grated zest of one lemon
Finely grated zest of one orange
1 tablespoon dark rum
1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract
Pinch of salt
1 1/2 pounds whole milk ricotta

1. Adjust rack to middle position and heat oven to 375 degrees. Butter and flour the bottom and sides of an 8-inch spring form pan. Separate two of the eggs. Beat the cream cheese in the bowl of an electric mixer on medium speed until smooth, about 1 minute. Gradually add 1/2 cup plus 1 tablespoon sugar and beat on medium for 2 minutes more. Add the two whole eggs and the two yolks one at a time and beat until each is just incorporated, scraping the sides of the pan after each addition to avoid lumps.

Add the zest, rum, vanilla and salt and beat until incorporated. Add the ricotta and beat on low until fully mixed into a homogenous batter.

2. Beat the two reserved egg whites on high speed for 15 seconds. Gradually add 2 tablespoons sugar and beat until whites just hold a 2-inch peak. Fold the beaten whites into the mixture.

3. Pour the batter into the prepared pan and bake for 25 minutes. Lower the oven to 325 and bake for 35 to 40 minutes more or until the cake is lightly brown on top and just set in the middle. (See head note above for more information.) Remove from the oven and set on a rack to cool to room temperature. Cover and refrigerate for about 4 hours or until chilled and firm.

Plant and enjoy the glorious blooms of springtime

PART 1

Springtime in New England is truly a magical time of year as our dormant landscapes gradually awaken from their long winter naps. Lawns and gardens seem to yawn and stretch as subtle hints of color appear here and there. The silvery silken catkins of pussy willows slowly erupt to become fluffy, pale yellow flowers, while tender young leaves and shoots emerge in soft tones of yellow-green and russet. Early bulbs poke through the soil creating a welcome, yet fleeting, colorful tapestry and then, suddenly, it seems as if every tree, shrub and garden plant has exploded into bloom.

During these early weeks of spring, gardeners seem to welcome each and every color in the landscape, regardless of their usual color preferences. Having endured nearly six months of stark silhouettes, prolonged snowcover and the drab browns and grays of winter, even the most outrageous color combinations seem acceptable. These vibrant hues tend to be especially noticeable due to the minimal quantity of foliage present. Once leaves fully develop, green foliage will dominate our landscapes, helping to blend and neutralize intensely colored blooms in future months. A vivid portrait of breathtaking grandeur greets gardeners each passing day as flowering trees, shrubs, bulbs and perennials color the landscape with cheerful abandon. Although many of these blossoms are fleeting, their combined splendor quickly extinguishes lingering memories of a miserable winter season as our passion for gardening is rekindled.

Lemon chiffon clouds of sunny yellow forsythia bushes sparkle in the afternoon sunlight. Effective as a hedge or a specimen plant, flower color ranges from icy lemon to electrifying golden yellow. These rapidly growing shrubs are extremely adaptable to a wide variety of conditions but thrive in moisture-retentive soils in full sun, sending up suckering shoots to quickly produce multi-stemmed bushes up to 10 feet high and wide. Forsythia can be moved while flowering, but is best relocated before leaves appear. As flowers fade, a severe pruning of this vigorous shrub will promote compact growth. Old, thick, woody canes should be cut to the ground and removed entirely. Buds will be formed later in the season and an early pruning will maximize flower production on new growth.

Gorgeous displays of bright pink or white blossoms are provided by the diverse family of decorative spring bloomers which includes the cherries, plums, prunes, peaches and almonds, all members of the genus Prunus. Adaptable to most well-drained soils, they require full sun for optimal flowering, which tends to be extremely fleeting. Some may be short-lived but they are truly glorious in their prime. Weeping cherries are particularly popular despite their brief bloom period and are often used in foundation plantings, their pendulous form providing beauty in all seasons. The pale-pink to white flowers appear in profusion prior to the appearance of their leaves in early spring. The cultivar "Snow Fountain" has become increasingly popular due to its compact habit and colorful fall foliage, making it an ideal specimen for smaller properties or foundation plantings. Prunus "Hally Jolivette," which produces pale pink blossoms, is more shrub-like in habit. Purple-leafed plums display white- to pink-tinted flowers with contrasting burgundy foliage for a long season of colorful foliage. Members of this family are rather prone to insects and diseases and should be monitored regularly to maintain healthy specimens.

Few trees rival the beauty of the early-blooming ornamental pears. Rapidly gaining in popularity in recent years for use as street trees in both urban and residential areas, these perfectly-formed trees produce magnificent clouds of pure white blossoms followed by deep green, glossy leaves which persist well into the fall, turning a rich, deep bronze. These handsome specimens are tolerant of drought, poor soils and pollution and seldom require pruning. Grow in full sun for optimum flowering and leaf color. Mature specimens may reach a height of 30 feet, depending on the cultivar, making them rather large for many foundation plantings but handsome additions to the general landscape as a focal point or to line driveways or roadways. The "Bradford" pear (Pyrus calleryana) is one of the more popular cultivars but mature specimens are prone to damage during storms. More recent selections, such as P. calleryana "Red Spire" and P. "Aristocrat," are less susceptible to breakage and smaller in stature. Few species of trees offer as many positive attributes and low maintenance as the ornamental pears.

With the planting season in full swing, plant sales take center stage as garden clubs and plant societies share their bounty with avid gardeners. Check with your local clubs for dates and locations. On Saturday May 12, The New England Herb Society will host its sale at the Elm Bank Reservation in Dover (new home of the Mass. Horticultural Society) from 9:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Also on May 12, the Cohasset Community Garden Club will present a sale from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. at 478 Jerusalem Rd. in Cohasset. Plant sales offer a wonderful blend of both old-fashioned favorites and new varieties of plants with the added bonus of member expertise on how to nurture your newly purchased treasures.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, MAY 3

Mercury forms a 90-degree contact to Uranus at 6:42 a.m., making for a hectic start to this day. Allow extra time. There are likely to be unexpected delays, obstacles, distractions. The Virgo moon prompts you to stay busy with projects that need redoing, cleaning up, reorganization. Zero in on physical fitness, diets, self-improvement programs. The Virgo moon aligns with Mars at 10:39 p.m. and becomes inactive. This may be a stressful period. Slow down.

FRIDAY, MAY 4

The moon enters Libra at 12:50 a.m., bringing a break in this stormy astrological period. The moon will travel in Libra today and tomorrow, offering a last chance opportunity for launching important ventures this spring. The green light is on for new starts in your professional or personal life. This is also an excellent period for developing projects that need moral or financial support from others. The Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Saturn, Venus and Neptune today. A lunar alignment to Jupiter makes this evening prime for partying.

SATURDAY, MAY 5

Yesterday's planetary patterns continue to affect today. Pull out all the stops. Make important purchases, commitments, start new activities. People will be sociable, upbeat, cooperative. This is a wonderful time for meeting people and beginning important relationships. A lunar alignment to Uranus sets the stage for an exciting, romantic evening.

SUNDAY, MAY 6

Potent planetary energies affect the next few days. Take it slow and easy. Don't make waves. The planet Mercury moves into Gemini at 2:03 a.m. Mercury will begin retrograde travel when it reaches the twenty-ninth degree of Gemini on June 4. Therefore, it remains in the sign Gemini until July 12. The final windup to this month's full moon begins at 4:00 a.m., when the moon enters Scorpio. In addition, Jupiter opposes Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, at 6:40 a.m. Mercury aligns with Saturn in the early morning hours. Avoid late-night bickering; keep your rhetoric down.

MONDAY, MAY 7

Wake up in a good mood. Stay calm no matter what is happening around you. The full moon culminates at 9:53 a.m., 17-degrees of Scorpio/Taurus. The best way to channel today's high energy is to work. You can be extremely productive. Tackle jobs you've been putting off and get them out of the way. Make repairs, renovate, clean and reorganize The moon becomes inactive at 11:25 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Look within for answers, and you will find what you need to get back on track.

TUESDAY, MAY 8

Resolve to start this day with a peaceful, positive attitude. Allow extra time to get where you are going. The Scorpio moon is inactive until 9:05 a.m., when a Sagittarius moon takes over. The moon opposes Saturn at 1:05 p.m. and Mercury at 6:17 p.m. Follow through on your commitments; fulfill promises and repay debts. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off. Influences lighten up this evening, when the moon interacts with Venus. Social and romantic activities get the green light.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 9

A lunar alignment to Pluto can make for another difficult morning. Sidestep hassles or the blues. Stay busy with practical projects; jobs that need a finishing touch or repair, redoing. A lunar opposition to Jupiter at 1:25 p.m. warns against going overboard. Conserve your physical and emotional energy. Don't take on more than you can handle. Influences this evening bring a break in the astrological stormy weather we've been experiencing. Kick back, relax and unwind.

THURSDAY, MAY 10

The planet Neptune begins retrograde travel at 9:13 p.m., 9-degrees of Aquarius. Its influence enhances artistic sensitivity, intuitive ability. You can make great progress developing creative projects, hobbies, arts and crafts. On the other hand, this is not a time for making practical decisions. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Mars at 3:19 p.m. and becomes inactive until 5:10 p.m., when a Capricorn moon takes over. Mercury aligns with Venus at 7:47 p.m.; Mercury and Venus align with Neptune in the late evening.

Town agrees to Greenbush deal

Public hearing on agreement Tuesday

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen announced Tuesday they have reached a tentative Greenbush mitigation agreement with the MBTA and state Executive Office of Transportation and Construction.

After three months of uncertainty, Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said mitigation talks got back on track over the past week, and the town feels it is time to sign a deal.

"In the last week we've come quite a distance," Koed said. "This has been a divisive issue in town. There comes a time when we really have to get this behind us."

"I think we have done the best job we can do for the town."
— Selectman Chairman Fred Koed

Koed, fellow selectmen Michael Sullivan, Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris, state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley met with Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan and other MBTA officials Monday for more than an hour.

"There was a lot of back and forth," Koed said. "Speaking for myself, I think both sides came to

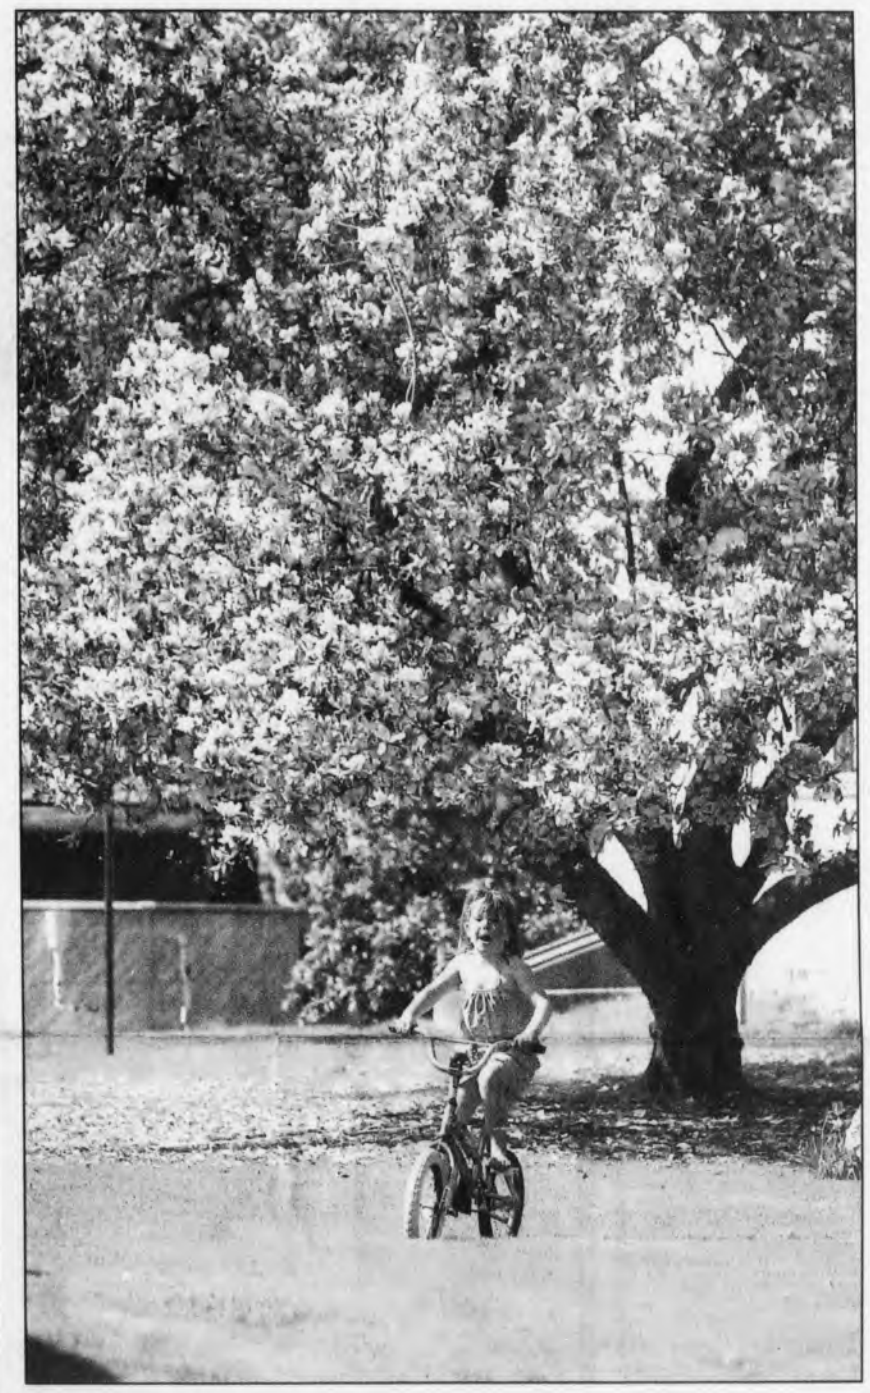
More money, tunnels are in the train pact

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The tentative Greenbush mitigation agreement the town has reached with the MBTA and state Executive Office of Transportation and Construction will bring more money and more mitigation items to Cohasset than the previous agreement reached in January.

The town is guaranteed to receive at least $1 million for the right-of-way, and potentially as much as $2.5 million.

The agreement contains much of the same details as the deal announced in January. Cohasset will receive $1.2 million to complete the James Brook Flood Control project; $250,000 to relocate the Sohier Street wells; and support of a state Public Works Economic Development grant.



However, the MBTA has agreed to support a $1.5 million PWED grant, instead of the previously announced $1 million. Also, the MBTA will reconstruct the town parking lot to the town's specifications. This frees the PWED grant up to be used towards any village improvement project the town undertakes.

Perhaps the biggest new inclusion is an agreement to reimburse the town up to $500,000 for any open space and conservation land purchases to replace the land lost to the train.

Other details of the agreement are:

- the understanding that the MBTA-constructed 182-space parking lot will compensate for any parking spaces lost along the right-of-way
- no horns, except in an emer-

One way test run vetoed

Pressure nixes pilot traffic plan

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A lack of community support, as well as the fierce objections of village merchants forced selectmen to renege their April 30 vote authorizing a month-long trial period of a one-way traffic pattern throughout the village.

In the two weeks since the vote, the trial period, which was recommended by the Village Revitalization Task Force, lost the support of Police Chief Brian Noonan, Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, and the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation – the group that came up with the idea in the first place.

"It's very hard to retro-fit something 200 years old."
— Selectman Tom Callahan

As reported in last week's Mariner, the traffic plan lacked the support of a number of key village merchants, such as Anne Gabanelle, owner of French Memories and long-time Citgo gas station proprietor George Roukounakis. Last week, Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide also announced he was against the one-way pattern.

CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo sent a letter to the village business community and selectmen this week announcing his group had withdrew its support of the trial.

"Since it has become increasingly evident that the trial period would be implemented without the endorsement from many village

Everybody loves Nick

Is part of school 'inclusion' program

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Having 100 friends show up at your birthday party isn't unusual when you're one of the most popular boys in school.

So on Sunday evening Nicholas Sida's parents rented the teen center, dubbed The Garage, to accommodate throngs of sixth-graders who came to help Nick celebrate his special day and upcoming graduation from the Deer Hill School.

"I don't know one person in the whole school who doesn't like Nick," said classmate Robbie St. John.

Graham and Christine Sida and their daughter Charlotte, 13, decided to go all out for Nick's party this year as a way of saying thanks for the friendship and support from so many.

Nick, who turned 14 on Tuesday, has Down's Syndrome but has spent some of the day in regular education classes since kindergarten as part of the school system's "inclusion program."

Longtime CHS English teacher and drama coach bids adieu

By Rick Collins

Room 250 in Cohasset High School looks like a typical English classroom. Shelves of books crowd one side of the room. The central table, half surrounded with a semi-circle of desks, is covered a foot high with books and papers.

And sitting in the back, is a graying older man with glasses, finishing up his day's work.

— Ron Emmons

Although it's just 2:30 in the afternoon, Emmons is patiently waiting around for rehearsal at 7:30. The wait is nothing new to Emmons; he's been doing it for 25 years as the head of the high school's drama department. He used to kill the time between the end of class and start of rehearsal by coaching track, but a knee injury forced him to give that up a few years ago. Or he used go to his home in Cohasset, but he recently moved with his new wife to Wellesley.

But he doesn't seem to mind the wait. It's a small price to pay to Boosters to ante up for JV hockey team

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Hockey Boosters has received permission to fund a new junior varsity hockey team, starting next winter.

Boosters president Joann Pilczak, along with Athletic Director Ron Ford told the Cohasset School Committee Thursday that if a JV team isn't created, more than 30 players would try out for the hockey team's 24 spots, and cuts would have to be made.

"If you can't keep them playing, they get discouraged," Pilczak said. "This is a way to keep them skating."

Ford said he expects eight players to move up from the middle school to the high school next year, and nine players the year after that.

Instead of either being on the varsity team — but not receiving any playing time or not being able to play at all — the underclassmen will skate against other underclassmen in a growing JV league out of Rockland.

Ford said interestingly, there aren't many winter hockey leagues for high school-aged players because they are all playing for their high schools. So if someone isn't able to play for their high school, they can't play hockey in the winter at all.

The JV league will cost $1,950 dollars, or $150 per player, and will be picked up by the boosters. Ford said he has extra uniforms for the team.

The JV team will practice in the mornings with the varsity team at the Pilgrim Skating Arena in Hingham, and be driven to the games by their parents. Pilczak said a volunteer has offered to coach the team.

Ford said funding for the new team wouldn't be built in to the general athletic budget until the program has the numbers and has been strong for a couple of years.

School committee member Mark DeGiacomo worried that since the town isn't funding the program, it would have no control over the hiring and firing of the coach. Ford assured DeGiacomo that if there was a problem with a coach, it would be dealt with.

"If you can't keep them playing, they get discouraged. This is a way to keep them skating."
— Joann Pilczak, hockey booster

New department head

The school committee gave permission for middle/high school Principal Dr. Michael Jones to hire a new math department head.

Jones said the position is necessary or the current math and science department head would face overseeing 17 faculty members when the new math and science middle school teachers are hired this fall.

The new math department head will instead oversee eight faculty members.

Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey said he had hoped to include money for the new position in next year's budget, but wasn't able to. Fortunately, because of salary adjustments, enough money was made available to make the hiring.

"Because some teachers are leaving, we were able to make salary adjustments and free up some money," he said. A salary adjustment, Malvey explained, occurs when a teacher making $50,000 leaves, for example, and the department hires someone for $45,000.

Jones said how much the department head would make depends on his or her base salary. According to the collective bargaining agreement the teachers have with the school department, a department head is paid 1.08 percent above his or her base salary. That amount increases to 1.10 percent the second year and 1.15 the third year.

Jones said he is looking both internally and outside the school system for the new department head. He said the department head will play a crucial role in organizing the department during the upcoming school accreditation process.

50-year anniversary

2001 marks the 50th anniversary of the current Cohasset Middle/High School building, and an anniversary committee has been formed to figure how to best celebrate it.

Selectman Merle Brown, a member of the Class of 1952, said the committee, headed by Jean Quigley, believes that a time capsule was buried behind the building's cornerstone and asked for permission to look. Brown told the school committee the anniversary committee would open it up, archive what's in there, and then place the plans for the upcoming school renovation in the time capsule and put it back. The school committee said yes, but not before some ribbing.

"If your picture going to be in there?" School Committee member Rick Flynn asked Brown.

"No, he wasn't elected selectman until the following year," fellow committee member Chartis Tebbetts responded jokingly.

Starting this month, the middle/high school building, as well as the Deer Hill School will begin a complete $41 million renovation and expansion.

School committee OK's athletic trainer

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset School Committee gave Athletic Director Ron Ford the go-ahead to hire a trainer for the school department's athletic program.

"The athletic program we run is incredibly large for such a small school," Ford told the committee Thursday. He said with the reinstitution of a "no-cut" policy at the middle school, the program needs a full-time trainer. "We see the need to have someone here full-time working with our athletes."

Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) rules require either an Emergency Medical Technician, an athletic trainer or licensed physician at all football and ice hockey games. South Shore League rules require coverage for soccer and field hockey games. For hockey games, the rinks provide an EMT as part of the ice charge, and for football, Cohasset doctor Steven Golden volunteers.

Ford said he hires EMTs to fulfill the soccer and field hockey requirements, and also tries to have EMTs on hand for lacrosse, gymnastics, basketball and wrestling. Ford said although EMTs are great for treating severe traumatic injuries, athletes would benefit more from a licensed athletic trainer.

"EMTs can't provide as many services as an athletic trainer could provide," he said.

"EMTs can't provide as many services as an athletic trainer could provide."
— Athletic Director Ron Ford

Ford has worked with Hingham High School trainer Al Blaisdell to create a proposal for an athletic trainer. Ford estimates it will cost the town approximately $18,000 to hire someone to be at the school every day from 2 p.m. until the last game or practice is over. He currently has $5,900 budgeted for EMTs. But he said he and football coach Tony Rolf have pledged to raise $6,000 for the position. The remainder will come from the athletic department's revolving fund which is funded through user fees and gate receipts.

The trainer would also be associated with Blaisdell's new physical therapy office on Route 3A.

Ford said Cohasset athletes will have access to the office, as well as receive "immediate treatment and evaluation of injuries" from the trainer on-duty.

He told the committee that an athletic trainer can also create a proper rehabilitation plan for an athlete.

"Right now I'll get a letter from a doctor saying John Smith can gradually return to practice," Ford said. "Then it's up to me and the coach to decide what is gradually."

Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said a recent injury to a visiting athlete gave him some perspective. He said during a middle school baseball game, a catcher from Mashpee was injured in a collision at the plate. Luckily, there was a varsity lacrosse game at the same time, and an EMT was on site. The injury turned out to be a sprained knee, but if the EMT hadn't been there, which usually isn't the case for middle school games, an ambulance would have been called, and the player brought to South Shore Hospital.

"For the type of liability we could have, we are doing much more of a service for the kids," Ford said about having a trainer.

The one concern the committee had was fitting the athletic trainer into the department budget after the first year. "That's my concern," said Chairman Stephanie Noble.

DeGiacomo said the first year will be a trial run, and would be evaluated and discussed before being included in the budget.

Water board takes 'Wolf Pits'

Ex-owners lament loss of senior housing development

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With a Town Meeting mandate in hand, the Cohasset water commissioners acted swiftly Monday and voted to take the 'Wolf Pit' property by eminent domain.

The vote was taken less than 15 minutes into the sparsely attended meeting at the King Street treatment plant.

In March, the annual Town Meeting gave the board permission to take the seven-acre parcel, located between Beechwood Street, Doane Street and the Aaron Reservoir, in order to protect the town's water supply. Water commission engineers said development on the property and the resulting extra run-off and septic leachate could pose a danger to the water supply.

The board voted to compensate the owners Leland and Leonora Jenkins of Jerusalem Road, and Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street $150,000 for the land taking.

The Jenkinses and Sawchuk do have the option to appeal the awarded damages, if they feel the price is not fair market value. Neither said they were sure what their next step would be.

Water Commission Chairman John McNabb said he was "very confident the price would hold up."

The Jenkinses and Sawchuk bought the property from the Bates/Pratt Trust this past December with the hopes of constructing senior housing. They feel the town has gained some beautiful conservation land, but lost much-needed housing units for seniors.

"The main reason I got involved was the senior citizen housing," said Leland Jenkins. "I could make a profit and do something constructive."

Earlier this month, the Planning Board turned down a preliminary site plan for the property. The Board of Health also denied the proposed septic system.

Sawchuk said the property is a "nice addition" to the town's open space, but disagreed with any contention that the property is not developable.

"The main reason I got involved was the senior citizen housing."
— Leland Jenkins

"It really is a beautiful piece of land," he said. "But for the town to say it's not developable, they're kidding themselves...They clearly bough the land to prevent development. They wouldn't have bought it if it wasn't developable."

He said he wasn't surprised the planning board rejected the preliminary plan. "How could a board do anything but what they did?" he said. "You have a hearing after a Town Meeting vote which authorized the taking; doesn't it behoove the board to do that?

"I would have been surprised if anything but that happened."

An approved site plan could have resulted in a higher taking price than the $150,000 allocated by Town Meeting.

"We did 10 successful perc tests [for the septic system]," Sawchuk said. "How many properties in town would support that. I guess the engineers' argument is that the land is too percable."

Leland Jenkins and Sawchuk said they proposed a land swap, where the town could take the Wolf Pit property, and in return give them a comparable, developable piece of town-owned land. Sawchuk said a land swap would have been a "fairer" solution.

"The town wouldn't have had to give me $1," he said. "And it would get some senior housing."

Jenkins said he will look for some other parcel in town to build some senior housing units.

Sawchuk responded to concerns that he had brought heavy equipment onto the site, and begun clearing the property, despite the imminent land-taking. He said he was trying to leave the property in a "nice, neat condition" by clearing briars and sumac away from the boundary stakes, with his rubber-tired backhoe.

McNabb asked the water department to check the site Tuesday for any damage.

Town counsel Valerie Swett submitted the land taking order Tuesday to the Registry of Deeds. McNabb said the water commission has no immediate plans for the land, but that residents are able to use it to access the reservoir.

The land taking vote was 2-0 with McNabb and fellow commissioner Robert Kassameyer voting in the affirmative. Commissioner Glenn Pratt, an heir of the Bates/Pratt Trust, abstained from voting.

The name "wolf pits" came from a time when the wild animals roamed Cohasset, and were a major public safety threat. In several locations around town, pits were dug and covered over. A carcass would be either strung up over the pit or in the pit, causing the wolf to fall into it.

Postal workers to help stamp out hunger

Cohasset Post Office workers will again work for the Cohasset Food Pantry Saturday, May 12, when residents are asked to leave food and household supplies by their mailboxes to be picked up by mail carriers for eventual delivery to the pantry.

"This is a wonderful public service by the postal workers," Marjorie Steele, head of the Food Pantry operations says. "In one day it virtually stocks our shelves for the summer, making sure we're able to meet the needs of a number of Cohasset families for non-perishable food and household items. We hope townspeople will respond generously again to this effort as they have in the past."

Last year the postal workers collected more than two tons of food and staples. This year's drive has been organized by Dennis Reardon with the encouragement and support of Postmaster Stephen Cabezas.

Steele and her associate, Bob Thompson, say this year the pantry has an ample supply of pasta, rice and rice products, but is especially in need of such food items as juice boxes, salad dressings, pasta sauce, canned fruit and vegetables, white sugar, coffee and tea, cereals and baked beans. Equally needed are staples such as dishwashing liquid, laundry detergents and paper products. Only taboos are outdated items, corroded cans or unsealed packages.

The carriers pick up the donations as they deliver the mail, then bring them to the post office where they are weighed. Other volunteers sort the items and help bring them to the pantry in the basement of the Congregational church on Highland Avenue beside the Town Hall, where they are shelved and stored.

The pantry is open from 9 to 10 a.m. Tuesdays. Any Cohasset resident with limited income or special needs is eligible to receive food at two-week intervals.

The Cohasset Recreation Department is accepting applications for various summer positions pursuant to the operation of the Summer Playground Program for children 31/2-12 years of age.

Contrary to recent rumors that the RICHARDSON-GAFFEY FUNERAL HOME is For Sale.....WE ARE NOT FOR SALE.....and plan to continue serving the Scituate and surrounding communities for many years to come.

Founded in 1959, under the guiding hand of Ernest A. Richardson and John Zimmer, the Richardson Funeral Home set a benchmark of superb service and community involvement in the Town of Scituate and surrounding communities. In 1994, the Richardson Funeral Home merged with the Gaffey Funeral Home, which was founded by David J. Gaffey and his family, and together became proud members of the Loewen Group International family of funeral homes.

The priority of superb services to families in their time of need that was so much a part of the Richardson, Zimmer and Gaffey families continues on today under the watchful eye of John Myrick, the managing director of the Richardson-Gaffey Funeral Home.

Local families can rest assured that in their time of sorrow and need the staff of the Richardson-Gaffey Funeral Home will be here for them and help them through what can be the most traumatic time in their lives.

We thank you for your confidence and promise you that we will continue to be here for you in the future.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

HELLO COHASSET

This week's column has a lot of news and information for you to read but first, I wanted to talk about some things. I wanted to send some prayers and thoughts to the families who were involved in the tragic bus accident of a few weeks ago involving families from the town of Newton. This was such a horrible thing to watch, hear and think about for us, I cannot imagine what they are all going through. You know, it did make me stop and think as on the day of the Memorial service that was being held in Newton, it was 90-plus degrees outside and everywhere I went or everyone I talked to had something to complain about, "It is way too hot outside, what happened to having Spring?" etc, never mind the constant little complaints that all of us have on a daily basis. What I stopped and realized on that day is how a single second can change what we have on any given day and that if we keep griping, complaining and being miserable over little tiny things, it is sure making our days not so nice. It really makes you stop and take a good look at yourself and what each day brings for us, I have said it before and will continue to say and think it, "stop, smell the flowers, enjoy life's small pleasures and get rid of the complaints" because I cannot imagine what it is like on the other side, never having a chance to enjoy those moments again with the ones you love. Sure, we all have ups and downs and in betweens but boy, we are so lucky to have it in any way, shape or form. Don't you think?

CHURCH AUCTION

Let's start off this column with some news about a Time and Talent Auction being held by the Second Congregational Church. The Church is having another auction to benefit various projects this year. The docket is full of many wonderful items that will be put to bid on Saturday, May 26.. The list includes trips, week and weekend getaways, dinners from local restaurants, baby sitting services and even Christmas Tree decorating. The doors will open at 7 p.m. and bidding starts promptly at 7:30. Light refreshments will be served. It should be a very fun evening for all who attend.

OFF TO LONDON

Here, members Lee Drew and Judy Dickstein get ready for the plant sale.

Webelos see news in the making

By Paul Pozniak, Andrew Liberty and Jack Emmanuello

The Cohasset Pack 38 Webelos 1 den toured the WHDH (Channel 7) news and editing rooms over February vacation. This was a trip to downtown Boston by commuter boat and car on a bitterly cold winter day. The Webelos learned about how WHDH gets, edits and presents the news. They interviewed reporter Sean Hennessy about his and other jobs in the news broadcasting business.

The Scouts enjoyed these parts of the trip best: the editing room because they got to see breaking news; the weather reporting green screen; and the vast wall of TVs showing news from every possible station. The Webelos made the trip to achieve requirements for the Webelo Communicator badge (as is the writing of this article).

It was a great tour and was followed by a delicious lunch at McDonald's. The Webelos will continue to do fun activities while learning all year.

EMT supervisor Brendan McNiff shows Webelos first aid in another recent scout activity.

Mystery night at Buttonwood

Buttonwood Books in Cohasset will host its Spring Mystery Night on Wednesday May 23, from 7-9 p.m. Featured will be Cynthia Peale, Katherine Hall Page and Hallie Ephron and Don Davidoff writing as G.H. Ephron. Peale is the author of the Beacon Hill Mysteries. In "Murder at Bertram's Bower," two residents of a home for "fallen women" are brutally murdered, and matron Agatha Montgomery must seek help quickly to save the home from scandal. Agatha award-winner Katherine Hall Page presents her most challenging plot yet in "The Body in the Moonlight," when caterer and amateur sleuth Faith Fairchild must solve a murder that appears to be tied to her own catering efforts and that presents a threat not only to Faith's career but to her marriage. Hallie Ephron and Don Davidoff have co-authored "Amnesia," the first in a series starring Dr. Peter Zak, forensic psychologist. When a witness to a murder is shot in the head and spends six weeks in a coma, Zak must decide just how reliable are the memories which begin to surface, memories which point to the culpability of an ex-husband. All three of these mysteries are set in the Boston area. Free. Call 781-383-2665 to reserve your place.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Polite pooches

Spring is here and the flowers are blooming. We can't recall a time when Cohasset looked more beautiful. Along with warmer days, sunnier skies and longer evenings come pedestrians of all sorts, including joggers, moms with babies in strollers, and friends and couples enjoying some conversation while they take a leisurely stroll.

There are a couple of dog-related activities, however, that can ruin what otherwise is an enjoyable run or walk around town.

The first is stepping in — for want of a better word — dog-do. It's not fun to scrape unmentionables from the bottom of a sneaker. That's compounded nowadays with the serrated and studded soles on most brands. Nor is it pleasant to find a deposit under your shrub, along your walkway or sidewalk, or in your yard.

Our town has a pooper-scooper law which means dog owners are required to clean up after their pets. The law, however, is nearly impossible to enforce because the animal control officer would have to catch the canine in the act. So it is our responsibility, as pet owners, to make sure Fido or Spot doesn't do his duty anywhere but on our own property and if he does, we should clean it up immediately. Pet stores sell pooper-scooper devices that can accomplish the job with minimal effort.

Secondly, under the so-called "leash law" our dogs must be under our care and control at all times. That means if your dog is not on a leash you should be in close enough proximity to have your dog under your control. But we think it's better and a lot safer to have the dog on a leash when you are walking or jogging along.

It is frightening and dangerous for pedestrians to be barked or growled at or worse attacked by a stray dog.

As reporters, we've had the opportunity to sit in on a number of "dog hearings" over the years before boards of selectmen. The scenarios presented are remarkably similar. Owners of the offending dog or dogs describe their pets as loving, meek and mild and incapable of biting or putting anyone in fear. They paint a Norman Rockwell-like picture of their beloved pooch sitting at their feet while they read or knit.

But the reality is all animals are capable of biting. And no one has any idea what mischief their dog gets up to when they're not around. Even a dog following walkers who stroll by its house — as we've personally experienced — presents a danger. The dog deciding to tag along walks back and forth across the road at will in front of cars that must screech to a halt putting the dog, vehicle occupants and pedestrians in danger. Other dogs are very territorial and go into attack mode when someone passes by their house on foot or bicycle. We've always been a little bewildered when the dog owner yells, "not to worry" because his saliva-dripping, teeth-gnashing pooch is completely harmless.

Just about everyone loves his or her own dog or dogs, including us. But it's our duty to ensure our canines are well behaved so our neighbors and passersby will love them too.

POLITICAL NOTES

Hedlund, Bradley on runway

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) and Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) attended the public hearing regarding the proposed runway expansion at Logan Airport. Both Bradley and Hedlund spoke in strong opposition to the proposal, citing many reasons why this runway is detrimental to their districts.

In written testimony, the Bradley, Hedlund and as other members of the Legislative Caucus on Air Transportation, called attention to the fact that the proposed expansion of Logan Airport could not be justified. The testimony pointed to the fact that Massport has refused to suspend the process of expansion until a Massachusetts Department of Public Health study on the health affects of Logan Airport on neighboring communities is complete. That study will likely be completed within a few years and will provide the first data on health detriments associated with Logan over a wide geographical area.

Bradley and Hedlund cited data indicating that of delayed flights, which constitute only 3 percent of total operations, 2 percent were due to severe weather conditions that the proposed "Runway 14/32" could not solve. Moreover, the 1 percent reduction in delays touted by expansion would only be realized for approximately five years, after which time delays would rebound to current levels and beyond.

They both argued that the proposal violated principles of environmental justice and derided Massport for not fully exploring alternative, non-expansion related solutions to air traffic congestion. Although Worcester Airport and Hanscom Field have received increased attention of late, Bradley and Hedlund contend that more must be done.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Opening Day

TO THE EDITOR:

Some of the best times for Phil and I were spent on Harold Barnes Little League Field. My father, the late "Nate" Hurwitz, and the Rev. Frank Chatterton (father of Ann Pompeo and the late Clark Chatterton), George McLaughlin and Harold Barnes spearheaded the formation of the Cohasset Little League, as well as the community center, for the youth of Cohasset.

The purpose of this letter is twofold. First, to let the boys and girls know about the wonderful people, who work so hard to give those same boys and girls an opportunity to learn good sportsmanship and the finer points of playing ball.

Secondly, it has been one of my most favorite privileges to throw out the first ball of the Little League and softball season.

To Mark DeGiacomo and all who are involved in the league's, my sincere apologies for missing opening day. My granddaughter, Jennie Curley, had her first communion on Saturday.

Please accept my appreciation for the lovely gift which was presented to me from the league.

Please forgive my absence and I hope the league will allow me to throw out the first ball next year.

A great big thank you for all your time and caring for the kids (little and big) of Cohasset.

Contact senators on Logan runway

TO THE EDITOR:

U.S. Senators Edward M. Kennedy and John F. Kerry are expected to issue statements within the next few weeks regarding their positions on Logan Airport's proposal to build Runway 14/32 and the centerfield taxiway.

It is imperative that citizens of the South Shore (who stand to be greatly impacted by the new runway at Logan) call the senators' offices to ask them to join us in opposing airport expansion that would continue to erode our quality of life.

Massport plans a tripling of flights low over our towns. The noise and air quality impacts of such an increase will be severe and will likely end the quality of life on the South Shore many of us now enjoy. Moreover, building the runway, contrary to Massport's assertions, will not reduce delays at Logan for even one day, according to public FAA testimony.

There are solutions to ending delays at Logan as well as the noise and public health impacts on the South Shore and surrounding communities. But these do not involve building another runway in an already overcrowded airport that lies within densely populated communities. You can't put 60 pounds of flour into a 40 lb. bag.

Senator Kennedy in particular is especially interested in hearing comments pertaining to how Logan expansion would affect health and the environment. Senator Kennedy's office phone numbers are: Washington, D.C.: 202/224-4543; Boston: 617/565-3170 (ask for Christie Martin). You may also go to the senator's web site and fill out a comments form at: www.senate.gov/~kennedy/contact.html]

Contact Senator Kerry at: Boston Phone: 617-565-8519; Boston FAX: 617 248 3870. Washington Phone: 202-224-2742; Washington Fax: 202-224-8525. Because the senators' opinions on this matter could prove decisive in the outcome of this battle with Massport, we urge South Shore citizens who may have already contacted either senator's office to do so again. Support equal choice for elders

TO THE EDITOR:

There is an important bill currently before the Massachusetts Human Services and Elderly Affairs Committee. The name of the bill is Equal Choice (S676); sponsored by Senator Brian Joyce. Equal choice offers Medicaid eligible elders 60 or over, the option of either receiving long-term health care in their own home or in an institution (nursing home). The vast majority of elders, state they would like to age in place, among family, friends and familiar surroundings. Elders who opt for home health care retain their independence, pride and access to community services.

Over the next 25 years the population aged 65 and over in Massachusetts is expected to increase by 48.5 percent from 843,000 to 1,252,000 people. This dramatic growth in the elderly populations raises significant challenges for the Commonwealth in how we pay for and provide long-term care services.

As the largest source of payment for long-term care, the Commonwealth has a major stake in controlling cost, along with developing other payment sources. It also has an opportunity to restructure the delivery system to make it responsive to both the needs and preferences of consumers.

The Governor's Budget calls for $100 million dollars for health care, of which $68 million is earmarked for nursing home care. Surely, some of this money can be re-allocated to home health care.

Currently, Medicaid eligible elders in need of long-term health care have no option but to enter a nursing home. The passing of this S676 bill would affect them positively in that it would give these elders a choice. Many of us fortunate enough to live a long life, will be facing these same problems in the future. You can make a difference now by supporting this legislation. Please write, call or e-mail your representative and senator and ask them to support Equal Choice (S676).

Join effort for tougher gun laws

By Amyra O'Connell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

COMMENTARY

Last Mother's Day as many as 750,000 people, including a group of us from the South Shore, attended a rally in Washington D.C. in support of gun control. During the Million Mom March, women, many with their children and husbands, waved signs and held banners proclaiming "Enough is enough." We had all witnessed the tragedy of Columbine and we had all become part of an era in America where mass shootings, and even more chilling, children killing children were a commonplace headline in our media. We went to Washington as part of a majority of Americans to tell Congress to reject the power of the gun lobby and to enact legislation to end this obscene violence.

Yet despite the public outcry of the Million Mom March we continue to watch our neighbors and children be shot down across America. In fact, 13 children still die from gun violence every day in this country. And while the laws in some states, such as Massachusetts, have become stricter, the killing has not stopped because it is still easy for kids, criminals and the mentally impaired to obtain guns through unregulated private sales and the illegal market.

Gregory Gibbons, whose son Galen was murdered in 1998 when a fellow student at Simon's Rock College in Great Barrington opened fire with a semi-automatic rifle, has become an outspoken advocate for gun control. Gibson also places the blame for gun violence on easy access to firearms.

"Every time it happens we ask why, why, why and search for answers. But the one factor that correlates 100 percent with every shooting is access to firearms. Without guns the deaths wouldn't happen. You are never going to see a headline, 'Enraged student kills six with shoe.' For all the wailing and speeches in Congress promising gun legislation when there is a major incident, we have yet to tighten loopholes on firearm sales at gun shows. You have to wonder how serious we are about doing something. I guess we like it this way, because if we didn't, we would change it," he says.

Clearly the fight to convince Congress is a tough endeavor.

Clearly the fight to convince Congress is a tough endeavor. But there are measures we can take to assure Mr. Gibson and other parents who have lost their children to gun violence that we do care.

On Mother's Day, May 13, the Million Moms will host a rally on the Boston Common from 1 to 3 p.m. Along with supporting the rally we urge you to come with letters addressed to your local congressman and state senator supporting three bills that will strengthen Massachusetts' sensible gun laws.

Senate Bill #1193, An Act to Further Reduce Gun Violence, will aid law enforcements through ballistic fingerprinting. Senate Bill #166, An Act to Prevent Illegal Trafficking, limits gun purchases to one gun a month. This bill will cut into the illegal trafficking of firearms and greatly reduce the ability of criminals and children to obtain guns on the street. The third bill, state Docket #1836 closes the assault weapons loophole. This bill will outlaw assault weapons which clearly are weapons of war, not firearms for hunting or home protection.

There is ample proof that gun laws work and are effective in reducing gun violence. By supporting these bills and by being visible on Mother's Day we will put Congress on notice that we are a majority.

For more information on the Million Mom Rally or the above legislation please contact Amyra O'Connell through e-mail at stophandgunviolence@mmcre.com. Or call O'Connell at 383-1574, Connie Afshar at 383-6006, or Vickie Watkins at 383-2652.

The biggest FBI scandal since...

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

If you came of age around Boston before 1970, it's hard to realize that we'd still be picking up at this late date the pieces left behind by Joe Barboza, the Mob hitman-turned-informer who was shot to death by his former pals in the streets of San Francisco, where the feds had stashed him away in their witness protection program.

Joe, who his underworld associates called "The Animal," was the man whose testimony sent Joe Salvati and Peter Limone to prison for 30 years before they were finally found to be innocent of the gangland slaying of Teddy Deegan, touching off what promises to be the FBI's biggest scandal since J. Edgar showed up in a dress.

In the days between his defection from "the Office," as the New England Mob was known, and his execution, Barboza managed to write a book, with the help of Hank Messick, in which he described the slaying of Deegan, a small-time hood who angered somebody in the Office by robbing the home of one of its bookies.

Teresa and Brenner were writing in 1973, 28 years ago and only five years after Salvati was sent away for life.

"The night of the hit we were in the Ebbtide," Joe/Hank wrote. "Ronnie, Romeo, Joe 'the Horse' Salvati and Chico. Outside, waiting down the street in his car, was Louie Grieco. We were all waiting for Deegan to call Roy and tell him he was coming to pick up Roy for the finance company job.

"The call finally came. Ronnie, Joe 'the Horse,' and I went to the back door to Romeo's car. I put on a bullet-proof vest, false mustache and plain glass glasses . . . The Horse put on a bald-headed wig. Chico took the car he had drove to the street where the alley went down behind the finance company."

Salvati's role in the murder of Ted Deegan, according to Barboza, was to unzip the rear window of the convertible to allow Ronnie Casesso a clear field to cover their escape. Romeo Martin and Louie Grieco, again according to Barboza's book, did the actual shooting.

"The next day," wrote Joe/Hank, "I went to see Peter Limone. He said: 'That's one less Irish ———,' and gave me the $7,500. Ronnie and I got credit for the hit."

Another member of the Mob, Vincent Teresa, also recalled the Deegan hit in his book, "My Life in the Mafia," written with Thomas Renner. They were a literary bunch, these '60s Mafiosi, but he saw it a little bit differently.

"There was one bad thing about that hit," wrote Teresa. "Two guys went to jail for murder that had nothing to do with setting it up: (Henry) Tamaleo and Joe the Horse Salvucci (sic), a — wiseguy. Tamaleo didn't authorize the hit. Barboza said Tamaleo did, but it wasn't true, according to Tamaleo. "The guy I really feel sorry for is Joe the Horse. He wasn't a bad guy, and just a flunky. What Barboza did wasn't right."

Teresa and Brenner were writing in 1973, 28 years ago and only five years after Salvati was sent away for life.

Barboza was eager to have his book written and a number of Boston newspapermen were eager to help him out. Harold Banks of the old Record-American was one. Jimmy Southwood of the old Herald was another.

He actually started interviewing The Animal but eventually backed out.

I was told that Barboza used to visit Jimmy's house on a back road in Sandwich with his friend, Herbie DeJesus. While Joe and Jimmy were busy upstairs, Herbie would be hiding out in the woods, guarding the house.

And Jimmy's wife, Ann, would be seated in the kitchen with a shotgun in her lap.

Hank Messick finally did the job and left us all with this note among his introductory remarks:

"In addition I should mention those several potential authors who for personal reasons left the writing of this book to me. Thanks, fellows, and keep watching for things that go bump in the night."

HEALTH NOTES

Landscaping and lawn care for brown thumbs

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Third of a series.

Even if you don't do your own lawn care, it's still possible for your property to provide the benefits of safe lawn-care practices. A fine lawn can use natural materials, but, generally, good landscaping practice reduces the area of turf on a plot to that which is necessary for scenic emphasis or specific purposes such as some forms of recreation. The balance of the property may be utilized for attractive plantings or other features which provide a more natural environment. To arrive at a good natural solution for a property may take time and one should not expect that natural landscaping will be initially less expensive to implement, although it should require considerably less maintenance when fully established.

Lawn Care Services: Use competent professionals for your landscaping and lawn care needs. Almost all lawn care and landscaping contractors use pesticides. The Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture (DFA) has strict laws governing pesticide use, including notification, posting and licensing. Not all landscape/lawn services have licensed personnel. Trained personnel are required to carry their DFA licenses. Ask yours if anyone has a DFA license, and ask to see it. For your own and your neighbor's safety, you should use competent, licensed professionals.

You could be liable for problems attributed to pesticides on your property. Contact the Board of Health for more information on landscaping/lawn care, and pesticides.

Ask yours if anyone has a Dept. of Food and Agriculture license, and ask to see it.

Also, check the following web sites: www.massdfa.org/pesticide or www.umassgreeninfo.org. These two web sites represent excellent resources for landscapers and lawn care specialists. Most reliable landscape specialists have personnel who are trained at the UMASS Green School and have certificates to prove it. The state doesn't license organizations, but it does license personnel, and encourage periodic updates in their training. Accordingly UMASS issues certificates in Green School technology such as Integrated Pest Management discussed below, and Turf Management.

Also, notice in your yellow pages that landscape architects are listed separately and registered with the Division of Registration. Registered landscape architects are required to meet minimum standards of education and competence to receive their certificates.

The Board of Health is beginning a listing of organizations which have licensed and certified professionals on its staff. Call for a copy today.

Integrated Pest Management (IPM): IPM is an effective and environmentally sensitive approach to pest management that relies on a combination of common sense practices. IPM programs use current, comprehensive information on the life cycles of pests and their interactions with the environment. This information, in combination with available pest control methods, is used to manage pest damage by the most economical means, and with the least possible hazard to people, property, and the environment. IPM programs take advantage of all pest management options possibly including, but not limited to, the judicious use of pesticides. Qualified lawn care specialists use IPM and have been trained and licensed in the procedures of IPM.

Your property represents a major investment; provide for it in a safe and responsible manner.

The next article will cover newly enacted rules for the use of pesticides in schools and how your children could be affected.

Method used to determine your assessment

ASSESSMENTS

ELSA MILLER

The method to determine the assessment is the method used by fee appraisers. Although is it not done on an individual house per house basis, it is done en mass. Therefore the terminology Mass Appraisal. The three methods are the "Sales Comparison," the "Cost Approach," and the "Income Approach"."

Single-family homes are most often purchased by people, who intend to occupy them as a residence, and therefore the Sales Comparison Approach is the best method to value the bulk of the properties in Cohasset. The key impact is location. By mapping the sales, the delineation of certain neighborhood starts to appear. Other influences that come to play in the analysis of the sales is the gross living area (GLA), the style (cape, colonial, ranch), condition, modernization, view, garages, pool etc.

All houses do not go up or down by the same percentage.

After the data is gathered and analyzed from the fiscal year 2000 sales, a ratio study is completed. This process indicates the percent of change between the existing assessments and the sales. This percentage is applied to arrive at the potential assessment for the revaluation year. The percent of change can vary from neighborhood to neighborhood, as the sales indicate the demands of the buyer. It can even vary from street to street. For instance with the varying degree of view form one house to another, or proximity to amenities. All houses do not go up or down by the same percentage.

The bottom line is: What are the buyers demanding? What are they paying for and how much are they paying? Is it important to have a view, how much of a view? Does the buyer want to be able to have easy access to the downtown area and the schools. Is new construction in demand; is a particular street or a subdivision important? These demands change or shift depending on the supply and what on has to pay for certain amentias. Therefore we have constantly changing values. This results in the need for the triennial revaluation. The process helps to realign the assessments to indicate these changes.

Have more questions? Please attend our open forum meeting, Thursday, May 17 at 7 p.m. in the selectmen's office. Or visit us with your question on cable TV.

Environmental concerns about Bush and Company

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

I almost missed it, despite its being a front-page article— sandwiched between the piece about our sudden deluge of bees brought on by the heat wave [global warming?], the article about Cuba giving 8 Americans free medical educations provided they "promise to practice in under-served communities when they return home [wow!], and the article about state Clean Elections supporters having their programs cut in retribution—"U.S. loses seat on UN rights panel."

The rest of the world's countries realize this and are making it clear that the US chooses not to.

For the first time in 54 years, the U.S. was voted off the UN Human Rights Commission, the Boston Globe reported on Friday, May 4, "a considerable embarrassment that reflected mounting resentment among foreign nations over US policy on human rights and other global issues...." The article continues, "the unprecedented defeat suggested that the US has lost support among its allies....Specialists noted the effect of...tough stances by President Bush opposing the Kyoto Protocol on global warming and favoring a national missile defense system...would send a signal to US leaders about growing unease around the world. 'It's very important symbolically, and it may serve as a wakeup call....' "

The byline for this column is Cohasset Cares — cares about the earth, cares about people, in a common-sense, down-to-earth way. People I talk with and listen to lately are very, very concerned about what Bush and Company are doing — and not doing. What is more basic than the environment? Caring about the earth nowadays means taking giant steps to preserve what is left and stopping current degeneration so we can eat, drink, and breathe. The rest of the world's countries realize this and are making it clear that the US chooses not to. Unbelievable expense to protect ourselves unnecessarily, Texas-style, is not working for human rights. The simple decision not to join the rest of the world in cutting greenhouse gas emissions is obviously selfish and belligerent. Why shouldn't the rest of the world object? Being voted out of the UN Human Rights Commission is a clear sign that our Washington administration no longer cares about common-sense things. What are we going to do about it? Have a thoughtful week and see you next time.

One-way test

TO THE EDITOR:

It may be that the one-way traffic plan will be proven unsatisfactory, but a test should settle the argument without significant harm to anyone. It may even turn out to be highly satisfactory (but of course won't silence those who resist change on principle).

It seems ridiculous to ask Town Meeting to decide whether to do the test. Why have a Board of Selectmen if we don't use it to make a few decisions for us?

What should be realized is that the Village, like our private property and like our bodies, is always changing. If we do nothing, the change is gradually downhill. If we act, we might arrest the decline or even improve it.

R. Murray Campbell
75 Old Pasture Road

Beach Street

TO THE EDITOR:

To: Members of the Cohasset Conservation Commission

I know the members of the Conservation Commission are keenly aware of the growing official and public sentiment for proactive conservation of remaining open spaces in communities such as Cohasset. It is in that spirit that I am writing this memo to expand on the statement I made at your meeting on Jan. 11 during discussion of the proposals for building houses in the rock-bound hill area lying above Beach Street.

My request was that, in making its judgments in this matter, the Commission explicitly consider its fundamental mandate as set forth in its enabling legislation. That mandate is described in Chapter 40, Section 8C, of the General Laws of Massachusetts, Part I, Title VII (I was unable to find this document in your office, so I downloaded it from the state website, and attach it hereto.) I have underlined the particular legislative language that describes the basic responsibilities of the Commission, specifically the functions in addition to the wetlands regulations. Without for a moment minimizing the crucial nature of the wetlands protection function, nor the valiant efforts of the Commission to carry them out, I did want to remind the Commission that the Commonwealth also established it and similar commissions to carry out other, broader functions within the meaning of "conservation".

The legislation establishing the conservation commissions states these dual purposes as "the promotion and development of the natural resources" along with "the protection of watershed resources." It authorizes preparation of a "conservation and passive outdoor recreation plan". Such plan should identify wetland areas, but in addition should identify " other areas which public necessity requires to be retained for conservation and passive recreation use."

I can think of no more appropriate area meeting that criterion than the remaining undeveloped high hilltop land lying above Beach street. The tatter's unique siting, its historic natural formations, and the intolerable prospects of further flooding of the neighborhood lying below, suggests the high desirability of conserving this remaining natural resource for multiple public use. The Cohasset Conservation Trust has already reached that conclusion in its preemptive acquisition of land abutting the properties under discussion.

My request is that your broader mandate be kept in explicit focus in your discussion of the extraordinarily sensitive area in question. It seems to me that the Commission is in a unique position to exercise leadership in applying the broad definition of "conservation" which is set forth in its enabling legislation.

CRC changes one-way stance

MR. FRED KOED, CHAIRMAN
COHASSET BOARD OF SELECTMEN

After further discussion with village business owners, town officials and local residents the CRC has decided to withdraw its support for the one-way circulation trial period in the village center. Though the one-way pattern could instill many potential benefits to the village environment from a safety, circulation, and aesthetic standpoint, there appear to be a significant number of community concerns, which will make it difficult to effectively and constructively undertake the trial. In addition, it has become more evident that a 30-day trial period may not be an adequate amount of time to complete a thorough study of the circulation and business activity impacts, nor may it give the community enough time to adapt to the change.

Though the CRC had not taken a formal position in support of a permanent one-way circulation pattern, the organization did feel that it warranted a trial period to better understand the potential impacts. The role of the CRC is to provide the community with a variety of design options to improve the village environment, so that the community itself can chose the improvements to implement. The role of the Town's Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF)is to narrow the choices from the pallet of available options for presentation to the community. This was the process followed regarding the one-way trial period. The one-way pattern evolved after several public meetings, which the VRTF ultimately recommended to the Board of Selectmen for a trial period, who in turn agreed to consider after further analysis.

As the reality of a trial period became more evident to many of the village merchants additional concern emerged, ultimately creating a high level of opposition. Though there was always a certain degree of skepticism by the merchants regarding the benefits of the one-way, it has increased substantially. As you know, the goal of the CRC is to help the community work in unison to improve the village and harbor environments. Since it has become increasingly evident that the trial period would be implemented without the endorsement from many of the village merchants, the CRC cannot in good conscience support the implementation of the one-month trial at this time.

If the Town wishes to proceed with the trial period, the CRC will help ensure that it is undertaken safely, and in the least disruptive manner to the community. However, the actual level of assistance and resources the CRC would allocate to this effort will have to be reviewed.

I would like to thank you for expressing a willingness to undertake the one-way trial period. The CRC will continue to work with the VRTF to narrow the pallet of design options on the many additional I village improvement ideas for you and the community to review. Through further community input and consensus building, the CRC is confident that needed restoration of the village environment will soon become a reality.

Dean Rizzo
Executive Director

Mr. Rizzo provided The Mariner with a copy of his letter.

No-way one way

DEAR BOARD MEMBERS:

I don't like to be "conned" — I don't like to see you all be "conned."

When I use the word "conned" here I'm using the meaning "manipulated" — and you were just that "manipulated," at the April 24 Board of Selectmen meeting by the CRC. You had a chance to think but you didn't.

I think the residents of Cohasset deserve better treatment. I mean just this — be informed of the fact that the CRC was going to come to this meeting to get your OK on their plan. The residents were not informed so naturally no one showed up to voice their opinion. I think you all owe your constituents better treatment than you gave.

Hamilton T. Tewksbury
81 Elm St.

BOARD OF SELECTMAN:

The proposal of a "one way trial" is not in the interest of the Red Lion. We do not have traffic jams, we are not in Boston. There is no need for it.

The fire trucks would have to go in a loop to get to the Red Lion. Let's not go overboard. Let's beautify the village but [let's] leave what works alone.

Trustees embark on management plan for World's End Reservation

Almost 35 years have passed since World's End was added to the statewide system of properties held and managed by The Trustees of Reservations, a Massachusetts non-profit conservation organization. The organization announced that a team of 13 staff and volunteers, including ecologists, historians, and members of the local community, has started the process of updating the original management plan for World's End. Scheduled for completion in October, 2001, the plan will help guide future resource protection and visitor services at the property.

"We have a wonderful group of staff and volunteers working on this project."

— Cohasset's Nick Noon, chairman of the Planning Team.

On Saturday, April 28, from 9 to 11 a.m., members of the Planning Team will lead a walk at World's End to hear from members and visitors what they most appreciate about the property. The walk will leave from the World's End gatehouse. The walk will be canceled if there is heavy rain. For more information, call Lisa Vernegaard at (978) 524-1865 or e-mail her at lvernegaard @ttor.org.

"We have a wonderful group of staff and volunteers working on this project," said Cohasset's Nick Noon, chairman of the Planning Team. "All are committed to conserving what is best about World's End and ensuring that future management supports those ideals. We very much look forward to input from members and visitors."

In the first phase, the World's End Planning Team will gather information about and assess the scenic, historic and ecological resources at World's End. At the same time, data from a visitor survey that was conducted at the property last summer will help identify the key issues and opportunities associated with visitor use at the property. In the second phase, the Planning Team will outline a set of management objectives that supports overarching guiding principles for resource protection and visitor use. Based upon this framework, findings and recommendations will be incorporated into an updated management plan.

According to Lisa Vernegaard, director of planning and ecology at The Trustees of Reservations, "The Trustees does not expect dramatic changes in the way World's End will be managed. Rather, the planning process will likely reaffirm what is special about World's End and allow us to apply newly understood ecological principles to ensure the continued protection and preservation of these special qualities." For example, World's End is a grassland oasis in the midst of an otherwise urban and suburban landscape surrounded by water. "We now know that the fields at World's End support populations of ground-nesting birds, such as bobolinks and meadowlarks," said Vernegaard. "These birds are rapidly disappearing from Massachusetts as a result of development and reclamation of grasslands by forests. The Trustees will consider habitat requirements for these and other wildlife in its management program so that World's End can continue to provide critical habitat for wildlife."

Located 14 miles from Boston, the 251-acre World's End peninsula consists of four coastal drumlins, Pine Hill, Planter's Hill, and the twin drumlins of World's End. These rolling hills offer open grassy fields traversed by miles of tree-lined roads and dotted with woodland groves. The landscape also features rocky shores, freshwater and saltwater marshes and upland granite outcrops, ledges and cliffs covered with red cedar and blueberry thickets.

The World's End Planning Team is comprised of volunteers Nick Noon (chairman) of Cohasset, Jay Hall of Hingham, Bob Hidell of Hingham, Maggie Merrill of Hingham, Katherine Morrison of Hingham, Steve Oliver of Hingham, Oliver Rodman of Hingham, and Sam Wakeman of Cohasset. Trustees staff includes Lisa Vernegaard, director of planning and ecology; Al Yalcnezian, superintendent, World's End; Michelle LoConte, visitor services coordinator, World's End; Russ Hopping, ecologist; and Electa Tritsch, cultural resource specialist.

A public forum to gather input for and to share preliminary ideas about the management plan is planned for June 14, 7:30 to 9 p.m. at Hingham Town Hall.

the understanding that we've given as much as we're going to give."

He also suggested that though Sec. Sullivan has been very cooperative with the town up to this point, that could change if the town again backs away from signing a deal.

"I think we're in the best position we've been in, and if we try to go back and get six or seven more yards out of it, it might fall apart," Koed said.

The town announced a tentative agreement in January, however a public hearing on the deal highlighted a number of issues residents felt were missing, particularly a way to resolve any problems during construction, and more compensation for the loss of open space along the right-of-way.

Selectmen were able to include an "Informal Dispute Resolution" process for both residents and the town into the current agreement, which includes a binding arbitration procedure.

"This really protects the residents," Koed said.

The MBTA agreed to conduct an additional appraisal of the 26-acre right-of-way. If the town's appraisers and the MBTA's appraisers can't agree on a value, the MBTA will hire a third appraiser. The town is guaranteed at least $1 million in compensation for the "friendly" taking of the right-of-way. An appraisal conducted by the town earlier this year put the value between $2 million and $2.5 million.

The MBTA also agreed to reimburse the town up to $500,000 for any open space or conservation land purchases to replace the land lost to train restoration. This proposal was suggested by Hedlund in a prior meeting he had with the MBTA in April. "It's been a lengthy process for selectmen and town officials and I'm happy some of my input has resulted in some positive elements of the agreement," Hedlund said.

The agreement also includes $1.2 million for the final stage of the James Brook Flood Control project, MBTA support for a $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant, up to $250,000 to replace the Sohier Street wells, and the inclusion of money to construct a sidewalk on North Main Street from King Street to the station entrance in the next transportation bond bill.

"I think we have done the best job we can do for the town," Koed said. "Of course there will be some critics who think we asked too much or not enough, but I think we're right down the middle of the road."

A copy of the tentative agreement is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Haddad said MBTA and town lawyers are hammering out the final language, and Sec. Sullivan is expected to attend Tuesday's meeting to finalize the deal.

At the insistence of Selectmen Sullivan, the board will hold a public hearing Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. before it takes up a vote on the agreement.

Brown said the agreement is the same as it was in January, except with the mentioned additions.

"We've added to it. We've taken nothing away," he said.

Hedlund was very diplomatic and said, "I think it's fair if the folks of Cohasset thinks it's fair."

He added, "It's certainly a much better package than the one that was on the table a couple of months back. It's much more generous of a package and it affords the town more protection."

Greenbush is the third branch of the Old Colony Railroad restoration project. Lines traveling to Middleboro and Plymouth have already been restored. Along Greenbush, only Hingham has signed a mitigation agreement. Scituate, Weymouth and Braintree are all in the middle of negotiations.

merchants, the CRC cannot in good conscience support the implementation of the one-month trial at this time," the letter said.

At Tuesday's meeting, Rizzo told the board he had received several phone calls from village merchants and asked the board to reconsider its vote. Many of those merchants, as well as a handful of residents, opposed to the plan, packed the Selectmen's Office for the discussion.

Selectman Merle Brown, who quickly moved to reconsider, said why try something none of the merchants want. "They're the people that have to live with it," he said. "If they're happy with the way it is, we should be happy."

Selectmen Thomas Callahan, who had wavered back and forth on the one-way pattern, found himself again opposing the change. "I agree with almost all the ideas for aesthetic improvements, but I can't quite understand how changing the traffic pattern fits into preserving the downtown," he said. "It's very hard to retro-fit something 200 years old."

Selectmen Ronnie McMorris argued if it isn't broke, don't fix it. "I don't think it makes sense, because we don't have a problem," she said. "We're going to go through a major discombobulation of the whole downtown area to solve a problem that doesn't exist."

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed thought the April 30 vote was an example of the board jumping at an idea without having the proper information needed to make a decision. He credited South Main Street resident Ralph Dormitzer for pointing out the lack of a plan to analyze the results, and providing the board with a study that said gas stations rely on drive-by traffic for 86 percent of their business.

Brown argued that the only problem with village traffic was delivery trucks parked in the village. His contention was backed by Police Sgt. Robert Jackson, Lincoln, Roukounakis, and Beach Street resident Priscilla Daniels.

Selectman Michael Sullivan suggested that a monitor be hired to stand in the village for a week and track delivery trucks in the village. Callahan suggested eliminating parking on the western side of Elm Street, next to Cohasset Hardware, and designating that a loading area for village delivery trucks.

Roukounakis said in 1979 the delivery trucks were required to park in the town parking lot and wheel their deliveries into the village. He said it worked well for a few weeks and then the town stopped enforcing it.

Robert Martinof Spring Street, said the town's focus is on the wrong area. "Get the sidewalks done, get the streets done," he said. "There's lots of good stuff in those plans, but that can come later."

South Main Street resident Herb Towle doesn't see the need to even fix the sidewalks. "I don't have any trouble on any of the sidewalks in town, and I've been here since 1918."

"That was the last time the sidewalks were fixed," Martin joked.

"And they did a good job, because I can still walk on them," Towle shot back.

Selectmen closed the hearing by voting to keep the traffic plan as is. Brown said the Chamber of Commerce needs to work with the Village Revitalization Task Force and the CRC and develop a new plan for dealing with parking and delivery issues.

gency or temporary situation

- consideration of four-quadrant gates at the King, Sohier, Pleasant, Spring/Pond, and Beechwood Street grade crossings, provided they meet all state and federal safety requirements and regulations at that particular crossing
- median barriers will be the minimum length permitted by the Federal Railroad Administration, except at the North Main Street crossing, which will be "as long as necessary."
- the MBTA will design the King Street grade crossing so that trucks leaving the Recycling Transfer Facility will be able to make the turn onto King Street
- a new traffic signal at the King Street, North Main Street, Forest Avenue intersection, that will be coordinated with the King Street grade crossing, and be either a flashing or solid light, depending on the town's preference
- a bridge connecting Rocky Lane and North Main Street. The MBTA will work with the town at the 60 percent completion stage to develop a mutually acceptable design
- a new sidewalk along Sohier Street, from the South Shore Music Circus to Ripley Road
- one-way track crossings at the Sohier Street and King street grade crossings
- a mutually acceptable design for the Spring/Pond Street intersection
- new fire hydrants and water main extensions where any public or private grade crossing is closed, so that there is no increase between any property and the nearest fire hydrant
- an advance warning sign on Pond Street to warn eastbound motorists of an oncoming train
- provide pipe sleeves under the railroad bed for future underground utility lines
- warning bells at all grade crossings
- a one-way entrance off North Main Street into the station, and room for possible future expansion to a two way entrance. There will be no space provided for a vehicular drop-off point
- a traffic signal and left-turn only lane on Route 3A, outside of the 410-space station
- evergreen screening between the station and the existing portions of Woodside Cemetery
- specific fencing measures for different locations along the right-of-way, as well as an on-site, hi-rail vehicle review prior to the start of service
- MBTA will replace the drainage culverts within the James Brook drainage basin, and new culverts near Sanctuary Pond
- no use of the gravel pits for wetland mitigation purposes, except with permission by the town
- all tunnels along the Greenbush line will be built with enough vertical clearance for possible future electrification of the line. The town also keeps its right to advocate for electrification of the line

The MBTA will also provide design plans at the 60 and 90 percent completion stages for public comment and review, and meet with each abutter individually to discuss specific mitigation measures.

And Cohasset will also get its own tunnels.

No, these won't be engineering marvels that span hundreds of feet underneath Cohasset Village. They won't even be accessible to humans.

The MBTA has agreed to construct "salamander tunnels" under the railroad bed to allow the amphibians and other wildlife to "maintain habitat access," and "minimize potential impacts to vernal pools along the right-of-way."

Even though it was the MBTA that suggested the "tunnels," it soon become a joke the rest of the board used to needle former Conservation Commission Chairman Thomas Callahan.

The full text of the agreement is available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Everybody loves Nick

"This is our way of saying 'thanks' to all the kids who have been so great over the six years," said Graham Sida, who was dressed as Austin Powers, the popular character from the movie of the same name.

On hand were Nick's two tutors from the high school, Ted Gledhill and Antione Miller. Nick started out as their community service project, an effort that grew into so much more.

The seniors work with Nick, who is speech impaired, four times a week on average and taught him some words and phrases in American Sign Language to help him communicate. The experience has been so profound that both Ted and Antione wrote their college essays about their relationship with Nick.

His special education teacher, Judy Ritts, said Nick connected immediately with Ted and Antione.

"He needed to communicate and interact more," she said. "He just lights up when they walk in."

The rest of the sixth-grade is also learning some phrases in sign language and will sing and sign "That's What Friends are For" as part of the class graduation ceremonies.

"Nick has been such a gift to us all," Ritts said.

Fellow sixth-grader Tom Fletcher, 12, serves as Nick's buddy on the school bus and helped him adapt to riding on the regular bus this year. In prior years, Nick rode in a separate van to school.

"It was a great opportunity for Nick," Tom said. "I couldn't turn it down. He's a great kid."

Most mothers would have a car full of gifts to take back home from a party that size. But Nick's mother, Christine, asked everyone to bring some dog or cat food instead. Nick donated the pet food, treats and kitty litter – two SUVs full – to the animal shelter in Scituate on Tuesday, his actual birthday.

The family has two dogs and three cats, Christine Sida said, adding that Nick loves animals. Christine got the idea from her 50th birthday held at the Lightkeepers last March where instead of personal gifts, she asked for donations to the Special Olympics and raised $1,000.

The party and upcoming graduation are bittersweet for the family. The Sidas haven't decided if Nick will attend the middle school next year or go to a special school.

"He's grown up with these kids and we're reluctant to send him to a special- ed. school," she said, explaining that she is meeting with school special education director Stephen Kaplan to see what the options are.

Larry Shultz, Nick's homeroom teacher, was one of several faculty members who came to the party Sunday.

He said Nick's popularity was evident when the class had to pick a T-shirt color for the sixth-grade Olympic day. The class chose orange.

"I said 'why orange'?" Shultz recalled. "They said it was Nick's favorite color and they wouldn't have anything but orange."

spend some time with his friends, as he calls his students in the Cohasset Drama Workshop.

"In most schools, kids either do athletics, or drama, or band," he said. "Here they do all three. That's why I rehearse at night. I can't make them choose between one of them."

It also gives him more time in a room that he will soon become a stranger to. Emmons has decided to bring the curtain down, on a 39-year career as a high school English and drama teacher.

"My life has changed," said the 62-year old, who began his teaching career in 1961. "I got married a year ago for the second time. I'm now living in Wellesley, and commuting down Route 128 and Route 3 is such a pain." He's also very critical of how the 1993 Education reform Act has changed teaching for the worse.

But there is one factor that didn't play into his decision to call it a career this June.

"It's certainly not the kids."

Early inspiration

Emmons had wanted to be a teacher since he was an eighth grader in Long Branch, N.J. He said while his father was away fighting in Korea, his teachers, particularly his social studies teachers played a major role in his development. He graduated from Monmouth College in 1961 with a degree in education and English and promptly got a job teaching in Neptune, N.J. He was recruited to teach at a new regional school in Shore, N.J. where he stayed for five years until a visit to Cohasset convinced him to move.

"I'd been up to visit once and fell in love with the area," he said. "And I wanted to escape the New York metro area."

He came for the area but stayed for the students.

"In terms of your clientele, you don't leave," he said about his longevity. "In terms of learning yourself, and being questioned by your students, this is the best place to be."

He started as a part-time social studies, part-time English teacher, "with an emphasis on English," and eventually became the English teacher whose class everyone has to take their senior year.

"I've taught every senior that has graduated from Cohasset High School for the past three years, and before that every junior and senior," he said. As a result, Emmons has been allowed to get to know his students perhaps more than most teachers.

"It means writing a lot of college recommendations, and reading a lot of college essays," he said. "I get to learn what's exciting to them. It helps me to know them better."

Drama director

Emmons had started acting while in high school and continued it in college. He began directing while at Monmouth and continued at his stops in New Jersey. However, by the time he left for Cohasset, he needed a break. "After my six years in New Jersey, I had already burned out," he said. "They had wanted me to do three plays a year."

After starting in Cohasset in 1967, he didn't direct his first production for nine years, and instead worked towards earning a master's degree from Bridgewater State College in 1975. In the fall of 1976 he staged the first performance of "Godspell," and it has become a favorite amongst his students and himself.

This weekend Emmons will have come full circle. Starting Friday night, the Cohasset Drama Workshop will present Godspell for the ninth, and final time, under Emmons direction.

"They [the seniors] did it as freshmen and wanted to do it one more time," he said. "And they thought it seemed appropriate to make it my last show."

Emmons is receiving some help from friends. His daughter Jenna, Class of 1987 and Stewart Replogle, Class of 1977, have roles in the production. Margaret Barlow, who was in the very first production in 1976, is the choreographer. His wife, Linda French, an astronomy professor at Wheelock College, is in the band playing bass guitar, and the Rev. Gary Ritts will be on keyboards.

Cohasset has been a regular visitor to the state Drama Festival finals during Emmons' years. The production "Story Theatre" took first place in 1979.

"But I've never done a production I haven't been proud of," he said.

Emmons has had a few success stories over the years. Nancy Walls appeared on Saturday Night Live for a while and is now a regular on the Comedy Channel's The Daily Show. John Kuntz won the Elliot Norton Award — the Boston version of the Tony Awards — for writing and performing a couple of years ago. Karen Anglin and Peter Reardon have also become professional actors.

"And at least three of my students have their doctorates in English and are teaching at the college level," he said. "I'm as equally proud of them."

Creativity in learning

Emmons didn't mince words when discussing the recent changes in teaching thanks to the onset of the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test.

"It's just not Cohasset," he said.

Emmons, the high school's AP English teacher, pulled out a copy of an essay question on the AP English exam that asked students to discuss a piece of literature's main character in terms of his or her madness.

"Now this is a thinking question," he said.

He said MCAS forced teaches to teach in a strict just-the-facts type of way that takes the fun and creativity out of learning.

"If you learn simply just to get through an exam, then that's good for just a year," he said. "But you need to develop an interest in lifelong learning. They should leave here with questions. If they don't they're not going to keep searching. They'll leave thinking they know everything."

He was also critical of teachers having to pass a standardized test before becoming certified.

"Teaching is an art," said Emmons. "It's absurd to think that you can give a test to find a teacher. It's like saying you can give a test and find an artist.

"Remember those ads where it said 'Draw me and win an art scholarship'? It's like that. 'Match this test and you can go in a room and teach.'"

Future plans

Emmons isn't entirely sure what the future will hold. He said he would like to pick up class at a local college, and spend time with his wife during her upcoming sabbatical.

But mostly he said he'll try to get used to a Cohasset-less life.

"I love this town. It's been home. It was very hard to move away," he said. "My life was this high school for 26 years."

He said he'd miss all his "friends" and all his colleagues that supported him over the years. "You don't do something like this as long or as successfully without the help of other people."

Because seating for Godspell is far more limited than it would be at the high school (200 seats rather than 450), tickets should be purchased in advance from the main office at the high school or from cast members. Ticket information is also available by writing to GodspellCHS@aol.com. All tickets are $10 with one-third of the profits going to assist the Appalachia Service Project.

Attorney: allegations against clerk a sham

Troopers' lawsuit claims Ligotti part of OT scam

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Joseph Ligotti of Cohasset, clerk magistrate at Hingham District Court, is at the center of a whirlwind of controversy over an alleged overtime scam operated out of the Norwell State Police barracks.

Trooper Kevin E. Roberts of Hanover, who is facing a court-martial, claims he was retaliated against after blowing the whistle on fellow troopers who allegedly colluded to get overtime through an elaborate scheme, involving Ligotti, to send Rte. 3A speeders to Hingham District Court.

But Robert Jubinville of Milton, attorney for Ligotti, said the allegations against his client that include his berating ticketed motorists when they appeared before him in court are "absolutely ridiculous, it never happened."

"This part of the suit is going nowhere, it's made up."

— Robert Jubinville, attorney for Joseph Ligotti

"No one has ever made a complaint, not one motorist," he said.

Jubinville speculated that Roberts brought the issue forward because he felt he was being gypped out of overtime.

"This (alleged overtime irregularities) was raised by Mr. Roberts in April of 2000," he said. "It was reported to Judge Lombardo and an investigation took place that determined there was no wrongdoing."

The issue has its roots in January of 2000, when Roberts complained to Sgt. Charles E. Cosgrove of Hingham , one of his supervisors, that certain troopers were grabbing the lion's share of the federal grant money awarded to pay for overtime for increased traffic enforcement, said Gerard Nissenbaum, attorney for Roberts and Cosgrove. Contractually, overtime is supposed to be allocated fairly.

Cosgrove and Roberts, who say they were transferred out of the Norwell barracks for disclosing the alleged conspiracy to their superiors, claim they have been harassed and have filed a civil suit in Superior Court under the state's whistleblower law.

"The problem should have been taken care of and instead they (state police) came after us," said Cosgrove, who has been a state trooper for 16 years. Cosgrove said other troopers besides Roberts also complained but Roberts was the one who pushed the issue.

Nissenbaum also hopes the governor will ask the US Attorney's office to look into the matter because federal funds were involved and that the state police shouldn't be investigating themselves.

The four troopers identified in the civil suit are Sgt. Robert Blazuk, Sgt. Michael Valair, Sgt. Matthew Palmero and Trooper Timothy Reardon.

But state police spokesman, Capt. Robert Bird, said the department's initial investigation vindicated the people involved.

"Because of the allegations, the department brought charges of untruthfulness and abuse of process against Roberts," Bird said. However, he said an internal investigation is continuing because of the increased scope of Roberts' allegations. Bird explained that state police routinely investigate themselves.

"We do this every day of the week," he said. "It's our duty as a department to investigate complaints against our people."

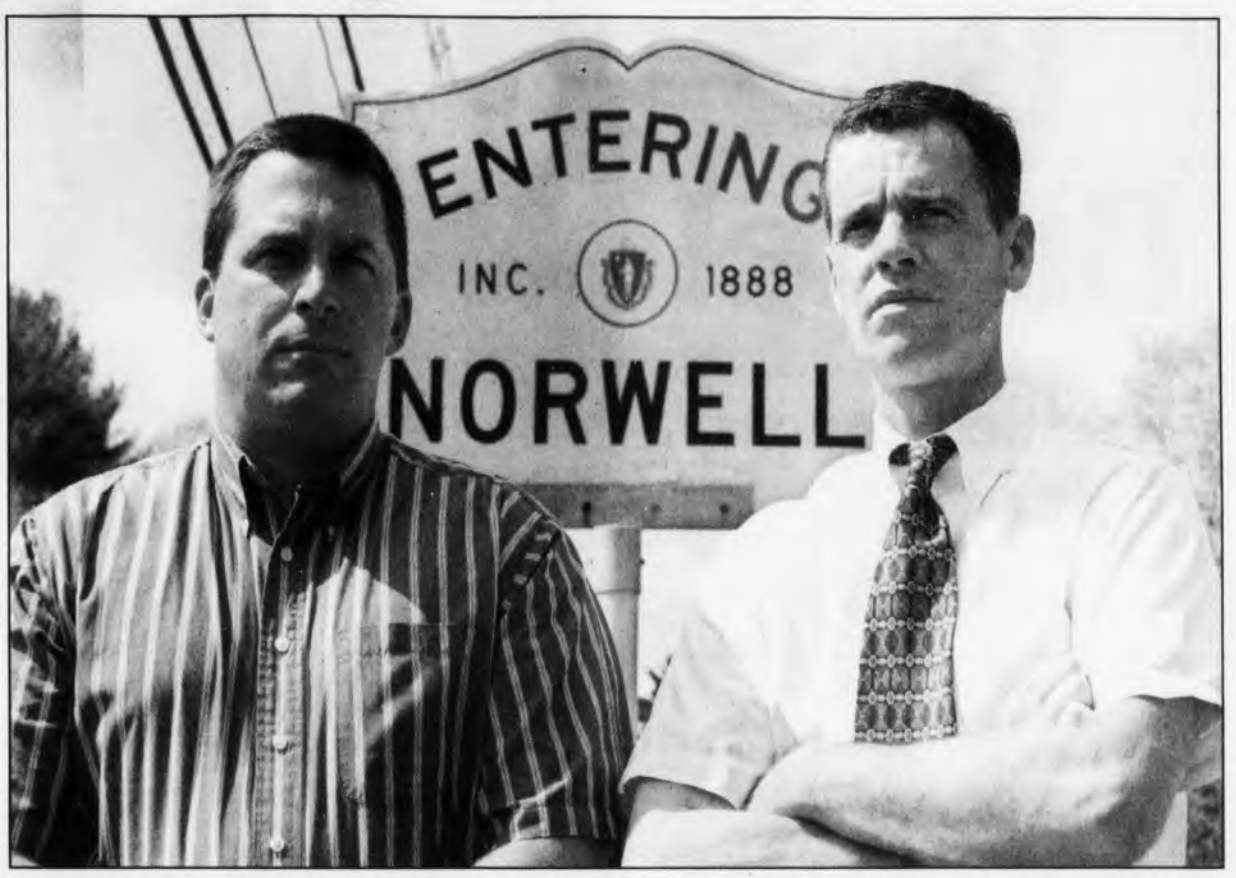
According to Nissenbaum, here's how the alleged scam worked. Vehicles traveling northbound on Rte. 3, for example, were clocked by a trooper with a radar gun from the Rte. 139 overpass in Marshfield and subsequently stopped once they crossed the Norwell town line. That way the speeding motorists would be sent to Hingham District Court where the troopers would have a better chance to log some overtime. Marshfield falls under the jurisdiction of Plymouth District Court.

The suit alleges Ligotti, the clerk magistrate in Hingham, who is also bail bondsman, was friendly to certain officers who generated bail money for him. He would give motorists, who were written up by the "favored" officers, short shrift. So, the motorists — facing fines and the likelihood of insurance surcharges — would appeal their cases to a judge necessitating the trooper also appear. Troopers get a minimum of four hours of overtime when they make a court appearance.

As bail bondsman, Ligotti gets about $25 of the bail money for arrests on weekends or evenings when the court is closed.

But Jubinville, Ligotti's attorney, said there are too many "ifs" in the allegations to make them credible.

"So many things have to happen here for the scheme to work," Jubinville said. For example, the four accused troopers and clerk would all have to be in cahoots and hope those ticketed would appeal. And then they'd hope Ligotti would berate the motorists, as is alleged, causing them to appeal to a judge.



"Also, there is no shortage of speeders on Rte. 3," Jubinville said, adding there would be no reason why the troopers would have to set up an elaborate scheme of clocking speeding motorists in Marshfield and stopping them in Norwell. And Hingham isn't a high bail area, he said. "There isn't a lot of crime," he said. "On a good weekend (a bail bondsman) might make $200 and that's with all six (police departments) in the district including the state police."

"This part of the suit is going nowhere," Jubinville said about allegations against Ligotti. "It's made up.

"If they can produce one shred of evidence that a conspiracy existed, then I will publicly apologize," he said. "If not, they should apologize to the officers and Mr. Ligotti." Ligotti is still on the job at the courthouse although he is not conducting any hearings for speeders until this matter is resolved, Jubinville said.

According to the lawsuit, in January 2000 Roberts approached Cosgrove, one of his immediate supervisors, with his observations about Hingham District Court irregularities. In his capacity as sergeant in the Norwell barracks, Cosgrove informed his supervisors. What followed is a complicated series of events that resulted a cover up by higher ups and retaliation, the troopers allege. Cosgrove, who was transferred to Middleboro, claims he was retaliated against because he pursued Roberts' allegations with his superiors. Roberts, who was transferred to Bourne, claims he has been subject to a series of retaliatory actions including court-martial proceedings.

Both men are seeking reinstatement to the Norwell barracks, monetary damages for emotional distress. Nissenbaum said his clients have the backing of the state police union.

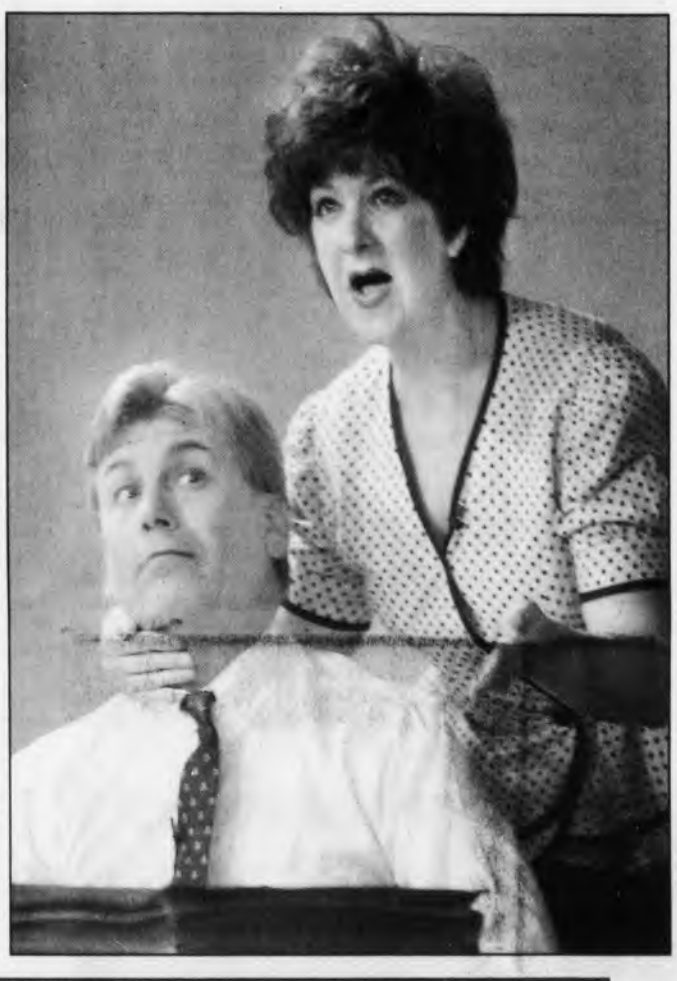
Bye, Bye Birdie!



Conrad comes to Cohasset

Staff photos/Alan Chapman

On right, David Bernardinelli as rock 'n roll idol Conrad Birdie is adored by Dale Gustafson in the Cohasset Dramatic Club production of "Bye, Bye Birdie" on stage at Town Hall.

The Teen Chorus in "Bye, Bye Birdie" pines for Conrad Birdie, an Elvis-like figure who comes to town and sweeps all the girls off their feet. When Birdie arrives in Sweet Apple, Ohio, the population goes crazy. At right, Rose (Marin Cronin) exhorts Albert (Jim Garrett) to get out of the music business.

Corie Bulman tells Kim what a Dreamboat Conrad, who has been drafted into the Army, is in the popular musical on stage at Town Hall through May 20. Call 781-545-9717 for tickets. In the story, Kim is the lucky Birdie fan, whom the rock 'n roll idol will sing a farewell to on the Ed Sullivan Show.

Skippers struggle to put it all together

A pair of frustrating losses drop C.H.S. baseball team to 4-7

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

As Roseanne Roseannadana used to say, "if it's not one thing, it's another."

More times than not this season, the Skippers have received solid pitching, hitting and fielding. Unfortunately, these vital baseball elements have seldom come together at the same time. The result is a 4-7 record.

"We've been in every game we've played this year, but too often we've found a way to shoot ourselves in the foot," said Cohasset coach Bob Knurek. "It's been a costly error here or a baserunning mistake there, or a lack of timely hitting."

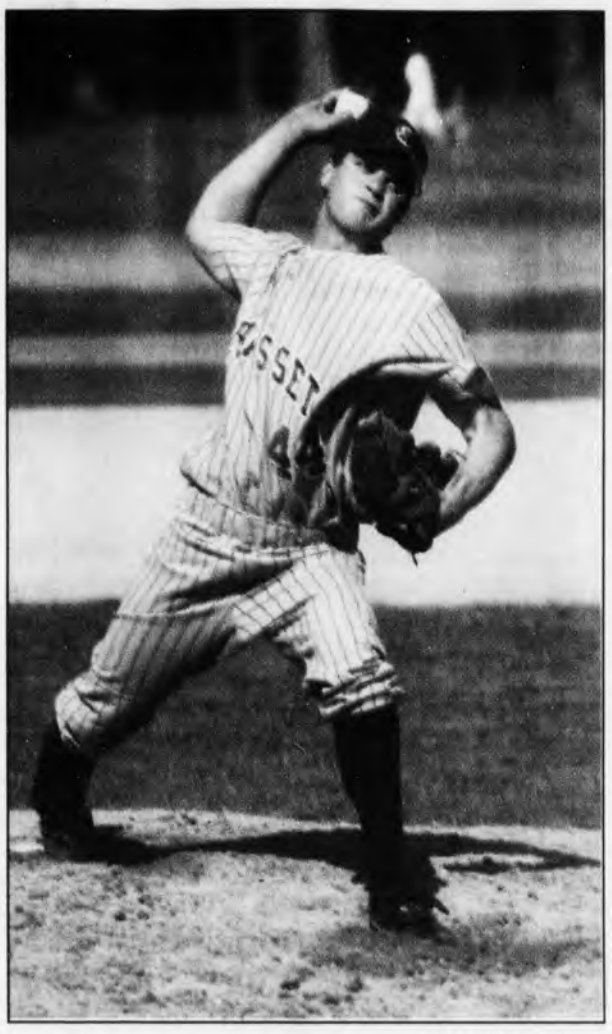
The Skippers' skipper added that the latter failing has been a particularly vexing nemesis for his boys in blue.

The team is hitting a solid.260-plus collectively, and three of the top four in the order are batting well over .300. Cleanup man Tim Straughn, who drilled his second home run of the season Monday, is currently fourth in the South Shore League in hitting with a .417 average. One-two hitters Doug O'Brien and T.J. Bilodeau are each over .370.

"When I think of all the runners we've left on this season, I just shake my head," said Knurek.

Back-to-back losses on the road to South Shore League rivals Norton and Norwell this week punctuated the coach's contentions. This dropped Cohasset's record in-league to 0-7.

On Monday, the Skippers fell 7-3 to Norton, wasting a solid five inning relief stint from Matt Ogrodnick. A couple of early errors put Cohasset in a hole out of which they could never dig. The team also stranded five runners in scoring position in the game.



The following afternoon, the Skippers went five innings without a hit, but then exploded for five base knocks and four runs in the sixth. However, that was two runs short of the Clippers total for the afternoon, and it's all the Skippers would get.

Bilodeau and Matt Snowdale combined for a solid one-two punch on the mound, but, once again, it wasn't quite enough.

"I just keep trying to convince the kids that sooner or later they're going to start getting those breaks that have been going against them," said Knurek. "Coming up just short so often has to be extremely frustrating for them, but to their credit they're hanging in there."

Knurek's aim is to turn this source of frustration for his team— the fact that they've been so close so often— into a source of hope and Cohasset hurler Nick Bolster brings the heat. The Skipper ace suffered a detached retina last week, and may well be lost for the remainder of the season, making the 4-7 team's push for a post-season berth all the more daunting.

EXTRA POINTS

MIKE SPELLMAN

Ah, springtime: when a young sports fanatic's fancy turns to baseball.

And what could be better. It's finally starting to actually feel like spring and the Sox are looking strong. When Nomar returns, who knows....

It gets a father of young baseball fans to thinking how great it'd be to take in a game at Fenway.

I'll do it just like I did last year. Let's see now...B-o-s-t-o-n-R-e-d-s-o-x-.-c-o-m.... "ticket sales" (click) ... "bleachers" (click).....SCREECH!

"THEY WANT HOW MUCH FOR A TICKET THIS YEAR??!?!"

Well, there's always television.

Of course, there's nothing like spending the day at the ballpark, the smell of the freshly cut grass intermingling with boiling hot dogs and melting candy, the excitement and, most of all, this wonderful game being played by finely honed and committed athletes. Could anything possibly be better than enjoying all of this with your kids?

Unfortunately, the Sox have priced out this father of four.

FORTUNATELY, high school baseball season is now in full swing, and several of our area teams are shaping up into pretty compelling stories. And best of all, it's all free: parking AND (in most cases) admission. Second best of all, the drives are a lot shorter. Of course, with gas

Whether it's on the courts, the court or the soccer field, Erik Shea has given his all to Cohasset High athletics.

Be true to your school

Cohasset's Shea is a young man of all seasons

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There seems a better than fair likelihood that Erik Shea has never heard the above song, which is more than twice as old as he is.

Indeed, it seems something of a long shot that this 1963 Beach Boys classic receives much play on the stations preferred by the Cohasset High senior.

But that's OK; it's not like he requires any additional motivation. He is already extremely "true to his school."

The first thing you should know about Erik: he is an exceptional soccer talent. He has played the sport year-round with the Crusaders of the Massachusetts Elite Premier League since the age of 11, traveling all over the nation several times a year, and even twice to Europe, to compete in tourneys against the cream of the cream of the soccer-playing crop.

For several of his Crusaders teammates — such as Rutgers-bound Brian Johnson and Virginia-bound Chris Corcoran of Marshfield High, both of whom were honored as high school All-Americans this fall — soccer is the extent of their athletic life, playing high school in the fall and club the rest of the year.

Erik couldn't do that. For starters, he enjoys playing several sports. Then there is the issue of how much Cohasset High means to him.

"I've made a lot of friends at Cohasset High and gotten a great education, " said Erik. "Playing sports here means a lot to me."

And that is why he participates in high school athletics year-round as a Skipper, playing basketball in the winter, and this spring, for the first time, playing on the tennis team...actually, playing doesn't quite say it. In fact, he shines.

This season marked his third as a member of the CHS varsity hoops squad. He was one of the tri-captains who helped direct the Skippers to a 14-8 season and a trip into the second round of the state tourney. He finished second in the team in scoring (12.5 ppg) and was deservedly named a South Shore League All-Star.

Cohasset basketball coach and Athletic Director Ron Ford said Erik could have easily scored 20 points per game if he'd been the focus of the offense, a role Ford said he could have easily shouldered. However, with one of the smallest teams in the area, the Skippers were best served going with a motion offense and constant ball movement, and Erik was right in the middle of that, ranking high on the team's assist board as well.

Clippers reign all over SSL

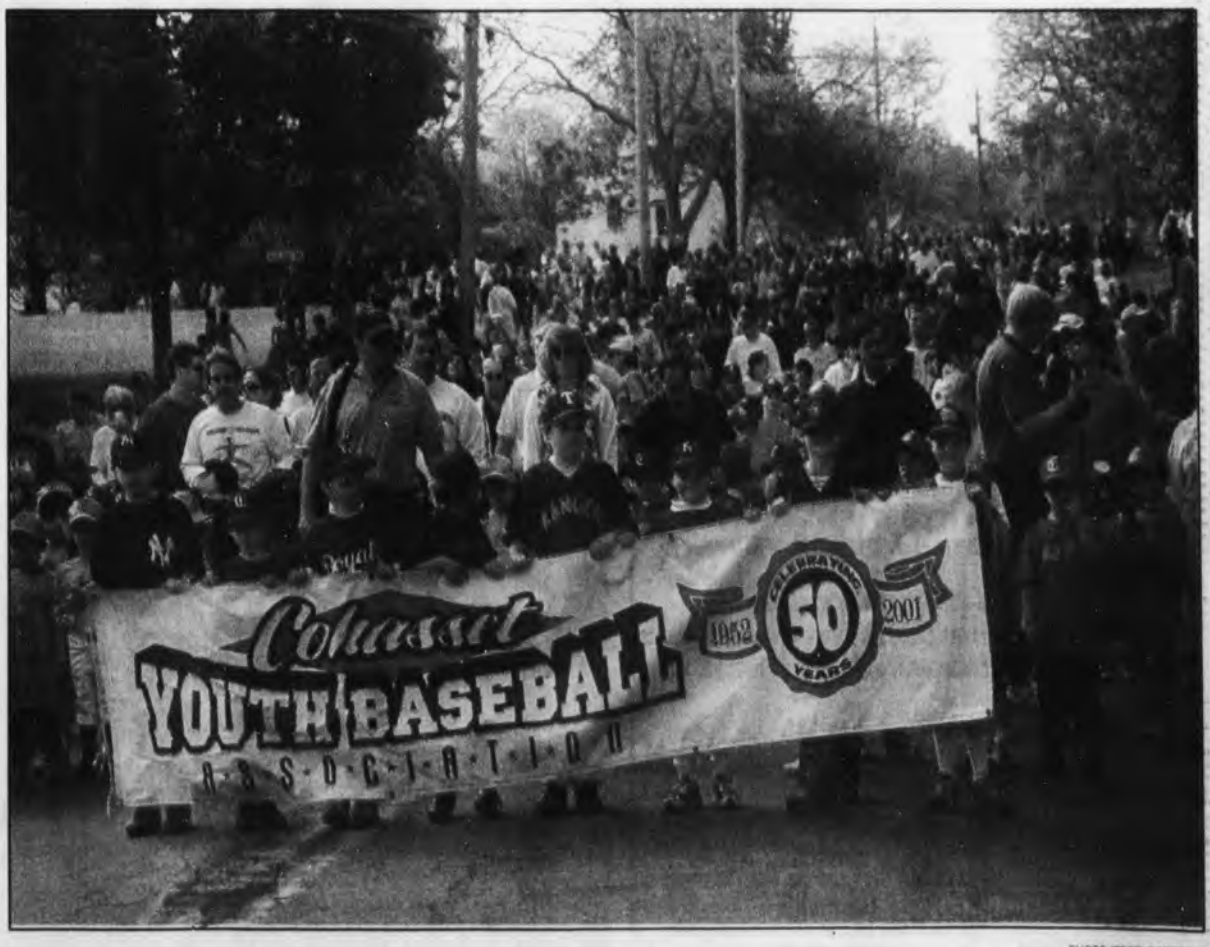
By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

On Tuesday, the Norwell boys tennis team once again solidified its position in the South Shore League as the team to beat with a resounding win over the up-and-coming Cohasset squad.

Though the Clippers took the win, 5-0, Cohasset managed to stay competitive in a few of the matches.

Norwell's sophomore sensation Sam Bitetti, possibly the top singles talent in the state, had no trouble getting past Cohasset's ace senior Erik Shea, 6-2, 6-0.

Throughout the entire match, Bitetti was able to capitalize on even the most minor mistakes made by Shea with hard ground strokes and a punishing overhead slam.



At second singles, Skipper senior captain Chris Golden was unable to maintain his season long unbeaten streak, falling to Mike Wiltshire, 6-3, 6-2.

Golden had won his previous six matches, including two over his counterpart on the extremely strong Hanover team, before dropping this one.

Undefeated senior captain Sebastian Colella of Norwell ousted first year sophomore David Ingber at third singles, 6-3, 6-4. Both sets were won by one break, as Colella

Opening Day

Clockwise starting above: Alex Gilman and Patrick Doonan with teammates from the defending champion Athletics team. The A's won their season opener on Saturday in thrilling fashion (see story on this page). Terrance Doonan couldn't help but smile after the defending championships. Stefi Belz (L) and Paige Strecker had on their game faces. To the victors got the spoils. The championship softball team, Astros, and baseball team, Athletics, got to ride in style Saturday. Lorraine Tarpey and son Brendan Tarpey were all smiles (and half smiles) at the Opening Day festivities.

Kennedy powers Athletics back to their winning ways!

Sunday nights "Game of the Week" at Barnes Field featured the high flying Rangers, fresh off a big win over the Pirates, against the defending champion Athletics.

Neither team disappointed. This back and forth battle kept the fans in their seats for the entire game. John Harrington's towering home run over the center field fence and a great relief pitching performance by Kenny Muir looked as though it would be enough to keep the Rangers win streak alive, but those hustling Athletics showed what champions are made of.

Getting his first start of the season on the mound, Pat Doonan was able to overcome a shaky first inning by striking out four Rangers in a row to give notice to the rest of the league that he's for real. 10-year old rookie sensation Mike Froio pitched very strong in middle relief. Veteran Austen Lanzillotti closed out the game for the Athletics on the mound, showing great command of all his pitches.

The Athletics experienced a "power outage" with Alex Gilman unable to play because of a sore elbow. The Athletics knew his bat would be sorely missed, but the rookies filled the void on this night, with Emerson Oronte making great plays in the field and rookies David Toomey and Eric MacCarthy showing the fans "the art of two strike hitting" by both working two strike walks in the bottom of the sixth. The importance of their contribution cannot be overlooked, for they scored the tying and winning runs of the game. Earlier, Evan Deutsch delivered a two out base hit that produced two RBI. This hit seemed to get the Athletics relaxed and ready to defend their title.

Tri-Captain TJ Kennedy took over the game with two outs in the bottom of the sixth with the A's still trailing by a run, delivering a bases clearing two strike double over the center fielders head to propel the Athletics to their first win of the season.

Laxers fall to powerhouse Hingham

Moore's hat trick not enough to prevent frustrating 9-7 loss

Despite a career-best game by junior attackman Jason Moore, the Cohasset boys' varsity fell to Hingham 9-7 in a match-up of two of the state's top Division 2 squads.

Hingham, which already boasts a victory over Division 1 defending state champion Winchester, grabbed the lead four minutes into the first quarter and held it throughout. The Skippers closed to within one, 6-5, at the end of the third, but the Harbormen pushed it back to three in the first two-and-a-half minutes of the final period.

Ronan Buick's and Paul Previte's late goals weren't enough as Cohasset fell to 5-2 in the Pilgrim Conference and 8-2 overall. For Buick, one of the leading scorers in the state

The Skippers were led by Moore's three goals and two assists, and strong inside moves against a tough Hingham defense. What hurt Cohasset the most were technical fouls and blown possessions.

"In the first half alone, we had six possessions where we lost the ball without taking a shot due to mental errors like moving picks," noted coach Kevin Orcut. "Three of those turnovers directly led to goals. Our effort and our hearts were there, but our heads weren't ready to beat a team of this quality."

Cohasset was also hurt in the first half by its failure to control faceoffs. The insertion of sophomore midfielder Robert Hickey in the second half made a huge difference. Hickey, who had sat out nearly two weeks with a hand injury, teamed with Buick and soph middie Matt Davis to trigger a run of six out of seven faceoff wins.

"Hickey had a good game," said Orcutt, "and our defense played pretty well. But every time we'd gain some momentum, we made poor decisions that stopped us in our tracks."

In goal, junior Kyle Weber had another solid performance, clearing well and making 12 saves.

Besides Moore, Cohasset scorers were Previte and Buick with a goal and an assist apiece, Davis and Eric Libby, each with a goal, and Hickey with an assist.

Buick, one of the state's leading scorers, now has 67 points in just 11 games.

Prior to this tough loss, the boys notched a pair of wins, over Norwell and Walpole, to wrap up their first tournament invitation in four years.

Cohasset 8, Norwell 4

Led by their veteran defense, the Cohasset boys' varsity fought off brutal heat, injuries and a tremendous Norwell effort to upend their Pilgrim Conference rivals, 8-4.

In what coach Kevin Orcutt termed "our best defensive effort of the season," the Skippers shut out Norwell in the first half, never trailed, killed off the final minutes of the game without losing possession, and scored as time expired. Defensive captains Geoff McWilliams and Justin Langham played what were perhaps their finest games in a Cohasset uniform, holding the 25th-ranked Clippers at bay. Junior goalie Kyle Weber dominated, making 10 saves without allowing a score in the first half, and finishing with 17 for the day.

"I'm very proud of what this team accomplished today," said Coach Orcutt. "We lost one of our best midfielders, Sean Chase, with a separated shoulder, and faced an opponent committed to beating us. We got an early lead on tremendous play by our attack, weathered a second-half comeback by a courageous Norwell team, and controlled the pace of the game at the end better than any time this season."

After a scoreless first quarter, Cohasset got on the board first on an isolation play by junior attackman Paul Previte. Working from the center of the field about two minutes into the second quarter, Previte shook off his defender, and threw in a low shot by Norwell goalie Brendan McDonald. A minute later, sophomore attackman Curt Kahn caught a Previte pass and quicksticked the ball into the upper corner for a 2-0 lead. Junior attackman Jason Moore extended the lead to 3-0, whipping in a feed from senior Ronan Buick.

Norwell opened the third quarter with a pair of goals, but Cohasset responded with goals by sophomore midfielder Tom Anderson and senior captain Lane Forrer, slowed by bruised ribs, who scored on a rocket into the upper corner.

"In pain, Lane played an amazing game," said Coach Orcutt. "His effort mirrored that of all the seniors. They simply refused to lose. Ronan Buick had the greatest two-point game (one goal, one assist) I've ever seen. McWilliams and Langham had an answer for everything their offense attempted. They demonstrated what leadership is all about."

In the fourth quarter, Buick and Moore bumped the lead back to four, scoring 13 seconds apart. Norwell answered with one, but the Skippers controlled play for the final eight minutes. Kahn ended the scoring at the buzzer, on a pass from junior attackman Eric Libby.

Previte led the scoring with a goal and two assists, while Kahn and Moore each had a pair of goals. Buick had a goal and an assist, Libby had a pair of assists, Anderson and Forrer a goal apiece, and sophomore Matt Davis had an assist.

"Beside the seniors," said Orcutt, "I have to acknowledge sophomore Nick Spirito, and our two freshmen defenders, Steve Davis and Conor Buick. They really stepped up to the challenge today."

Cohasset 16, Walpole 4

Playing the second half of back-to-back road games, the Skippers came out sluggish against their opponents, and led only 6-2 at the half.

"I challenged the boys at that point," said Orcutt, "and they responded."

Buick took over on offense, and finished the game with six goals and a pair of assists.

"Ronan added 15 miles per hour to his shot against Walpole," said Orcutt. "He was scoring from outside the restraining line against a pretty decent goalie."

A key moment came between the third and fourth quarters, when the referees whistled two dead-ball penalties against the Skippers, one for an illegal stick, the other a bench penalty. Down two men, Cohasset went on a scoring tear, finding the back of the net six times in a three-minute spurt.

"Our offense and defense continued to mesh well," said Orcutt. "Sophomore middie Tom Anderson had one of his best games, Curt Kahn surprised everyone by showing great defensive skills on a stint at midfield, and seniors Geoff McWilliams and Justin Langham continued to excel."

In the goal, junior Kyle Weber had eight saves while allowing three scores, before giving way to freshman Nick Murphy, who registered six saves while allowing one tally. Playing attack for the last quarter, Weber picked up a pair of assists.

Besides Buick and Weber, Cohasset scorers were Paul Previte (two goals, two assists), Eric Libby (two goals, one assist), Kahn (one goal, three assists), Anderson (two goals), and sophomores Nick Spirito (two goals) and Matt Davis (one goal).

Cohasset faces Pilgrim rival Barnstable in a rematch on Friday night at Alumni Field, starting at 7 pm. On Tuesday, May 15, the Skippers host Pilgrim member Duxbury, the number-one ranked team in Massachusetts, at Alumni in a 6 p.m. start. And the following afternoon, Cohasset travels to Hanover for a rematch that begins at 4 p.m.

Boys track team clinches SSL crown

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High track team kept its perfect record intact on Thursday to claim at least a share of the South Shore League crown, something it hasn't done in 25 years, with a 73-63 win over Abington in a battle of unbeatens.

A victory this Thursday over Carver would give them the title outright.

Liam Martin won the 300 hurdles and set a new league best in the high jump at 6-3. Robin Cunningham captured both the triple jump and 110- meter hurdles for the victorious Skippers

Other Cohasset winners included Brian Krupczak in the 200, Tim Baird in the mile and Dan Kinchla in the 2-mile.

The Skippers also cleaned up in the throwing events, with top places going to Craig Davis (shot put), Peter Maitland (javelin) and Steve Laney (discus).

Girls track

Hurt by a lack of numbers, the girls squad continued to struggle, as they fell to Abington, 79-57, to drop to 1-4 on the season. Maura O'Brien (high jump), Jen Buckley (mile), Catherine Flaherty (400), Maureen Equi (both hurdle events), and Gelian Weber (800) all posted first place finishes for the Lady Skippers.

Cohasset's David Ingber fell just short of an upset over Norwell's Sebastian Colella in third singles Tuesday.

managed to stave off a late comeback by Ingber. After falling behind 5-1 in the second set, the Cohasset sophomore rallied to take the next three games before Colella held serve in the 10th game of the deciding set.

Rory O'Connor and Justin Meddaugh, fresh off their recent three set victory over Matt Edwards and Pouri Pandian of Hanover, fought off the senior-junior tandem of Jeff Scribner and Joe Niessink, 6-3, 6-4. Scribner and Niessink did not even lose a game the only other time they played together, a laugher over Norton earlier this week.

Mike Allan and Kyle Swartz continued their season long success with a 6-4, 6-2 victory over Casey Brewer and rookie freshman Robbie Carpenter.

Girls tennis report

Norwell also prevailed I nth much anticipated showdown on the girls side, taking the Lady Skippers I na 3-2 nailbiter.

Cohasset, either sole holders or co-holders of the league championship the last six years, dropped a duel match to the Lady Clippers for the second straight year.

The match did feature a battle between far and away the two best female players in the SSL, sophomores Lindsay Grossman, and Sam Bitetti's sororal counterpart Sarah.

Grossman served notice that she's the one to beat on the SSL tennis circuit for the next few years, as she dismissed Bitetti is resounding fashion— 6-2, 6-2.

At second singles, sophomore Julie Shea found her career long unbeaten streak in jeopardy when she dropped the first set 6-3, but she recovered en route to her three set victory.

Norwell's three wins came from the remaining three spots in the line-up. All three were intense three set matches, but all went to the visiting Lady Clippers.

Both Norwell teams stayed unbeaten on the year, while the Cohasset boys dropped to 4-3, and the girls to 7-1.

Our great American pastime

prices these days, some might say it's a pretty close second.

Let's start with the Scituate baseball team that has exploded into prominence this season. After going two seasons without qualifying for the post-season, the Sailors became the first team in Eastern Mass to secure its berth in 2001, taking win number 10 of the campaign on April 28. The team is now 11-1, the lone blemish coming at the hands of perennial Patriot League powerhouse Middleboro (6-1 in league, 11-2 overall). These two squads are slated to for their second go-round next Wednesday at Scituate High (3:30) in a contest that will likely determine the Patriot League champion.

The Sailors have outscored their 12 opponents this season by a mind-numbing total of 111-27. The offense has been powered by Jesse Cole (.564), Jason Connelly (.455), Greg Levin (.417), as well as by the dynamic leadoff-cleanup brother duo of Bryan and David Butterworth. It's pitching that has been at the heart of this team's success, though, with Cole (5-1, 1.57 ERA), Connelly and senior captain Tim Duggan sharing the starting duties. All three have been consistently very good to spectacular thus far. Scituate has surrendered no more than five runs in any game this season, and just over two per game on average. All three of these hurlers have taken no-hit bids into the late innings in the last two weeks.

And, as good as this team is this season, they should be even better next season, with eight regulars returning, including juniors Cole, Connelly, Levin and David Butterworth. So this could be at least a two season investment for your baseball passions.

The rest of Marinerland features a bunch of teams currently in the thick of the post-season hunt, the minimum requirement for which is a .500 record.

Marshfield (5-5), Hanover (5-5), Silver Lake (6-6) and Hingham (5-5) all entered this week of play right at .500, while Rockland (5-7), Norwell (5-7) and Abington (4-8) still had a tourney berth very much in their sights.

Then there's the "Little High School that could," Cohasset. Drawing from a student population that just barely climbed above 300 this year, the CHS squads have somehow found a way to remain competitive in virtually every sport in the ultra-competitive South Shore League, where the second smallest school (Hull) has more than 80 students, and the rest have anywhere from 100 to 250 more. Tim Straughn is "the man" for the Skippers (4-7). He is currently second in the SSL in hitting (.488) and on Friday went the route on the mound to help Cohasset to a 9-3 win over Hingham, a perennial powerhouse in the bigger Patriot League. Senior captains Doug O'Brien and TJ Bilodeau play huge roles in keeping this young team focussed and playing together.

After starting the season 0-5, the young and banged up Norwell nine have managed to win three of their last five contests. The Clippers will probably need a big showing over the next week, though (with four games on the slate), if they're going to keep their playoff hopes alive. Staff ace Bobby Savoy, who missed much of the early going with arm pain, is now back close to 100 percent and should get one or two of the starts on the mound. The team has all the motivation it needs, this being the final season on the bench for head coach Al Kasalty, who has taught and coached year round at Norwell High since it opened in 1966. Indeed, it seems a long shot that anyone who's seen more than a handful of Norwell High sporting events over the last 3.5 decades hasn't noticed the "friendly giant" on Norwell sidelines. "Big Al" is an institution at the school, in the town and, really, in the entire South Shore sporting community. And this baseball season will be your last chance to see him (unless, of course, football coach Jim Sullivan is successful in his attempts to lure him to return for a 36th season as an assistant coach next fall).

There is a mirror image of this story in Abington, where the rebuilding Green Wave is doing its best to send extremely popular 33rd year head coach Tom Graham into retirement on a high note.

Rockland has been something of a Jeckyl and Hyde team. Wins over Hingham and South Shore leading Hull earlier this season were high points, but, as the 4-7 record indicates, there have been plenty of low points too.

Still, this is Baseball.

A football game is a great event; clearly, there's nothing in sports that compares to it in scale. For non-stop intensity, basketball is the best. Hockey is my favorite game to watch live. My pet response to anyone who tells me they don't like hockey is "Oh, then I guess you've never been to a game."

That said, there's nothing in the sports spectatorship forum that compares with being at a baseball game.

I don't know if it's the way the game has been so widely romanticized by our culture. Or if it's the fact that there are no time limits and a relaxed pacing, or simply that it's just an excuse to get outdoors to enjoy the weather after a rough winter. But there is clearly just something special about being at the ballpark, and that holds equally true for Fenway Park, your local high school or the little league field down the street.

Call the schools. Check out the papers. If your hometown team isn't playing today, it shouldn't be hard to find another game. In a neighboring or nearby town. Believe me, it's a great way to spend a free afternoon.

Be true to your school

"Erik really bought into our system and made it go this year," said Ford, who's coached the CHS varsity squad for 10 years. "He's just an extremely unselfish athlete who always puts the team ahead of his own glory or goals. And what he did on the court was only half the story; he was also just a phenomenal leader."

This leadership and unselfishness was in full evidence this past Christmas vacation when Erik opted to stay home to play in Cohasset High's annual holiday basketball tourney rather than accompany his Crusaders teammates to a showcase tourney in Florida, an event attended by several hundred collegiate soccer coaches who were in town for their annual convention. Crusaders teammate Jarrod Anderson missed Norwell High's holiday basketball tourney in order to travel to Tampa. Not that anyone can fault him; indeed, this trip seemed like a no brainer, especially to someone like Jarrod and Erik, who hadn't committed to a college at that time.

Fortunately, Erik has since been accepted at Bowdoin College, where he will play soccer next fall.

"How much more evidence do you need that this kid is totally committed to his school," posed Ford rhetorically, pointing to these kinds of sacrifices, which he says were commonplace during Shea's high school athletics career.

In the spring, Shea has in the past concentrated primarily on soccer, with the outdoor season resuming. This year, however, his last at Cohasset High, he decided that he wanted to participate in one last season, so he tried out for tennis.

"I guess I just didn't want my high school sports career to end yet" said Shea with a chuckle. "I thought a little bit about baseball, but tennis is my stronger sport."

Though he'd never before played in high school, Erik had knocked the ball around pretty regularly as a member of the Cohasset Tennis Club over the years, so he figured he'd have a pretty good shot at making the CHS squad. However, he says he never expected he'd be named the team's number 1 singles player. In fact, he sounds almost embarrassed over the fact that he splits that duty with four-year varsity player and team captain Chris Golden.

"Chris would probably beat me more times than I'd beat him," said Erik, humbly, who helped the Skippers improve to 5-2 with a win over Norton on Monday, and has them on track to qualify for the state tourney for the first time in a few years.

"But this is good for match-ups (against other teams)," Erik added, "because Chris is better than most number ones and probably just about all number twos."

Ron Ford, on the other hand, was not the least bit surprised by Erik's rapid ascension through the C.H.S. tennis ranks.

"Nothing Erik does as an athlete is that surprising to me," offered Ford, whose known Shea since he participated as a grade schooler in his summer basketball camps. "He's obviously a gifted athlete, but more than that he totally commits to anything he's doing. Soccer is clearly his first love, but it never seemed to me that he let that take priority over basketball. He worked as hard at practice as anyone else, and I'm sure it's the same in tennis."

The Crusaders have gone to the Massachusetts Premier League (MAPLE) State Finals each of the last three years — winning the title to advance to the finals in their region (Virginia to Maine) in 1999, making them one of the top eight teams in the nation.

When asked about his greatest sports thrill, however, Erik starts with Cohasset High's upset win over top-seeded Westwood in the state high school soccer tourney in the fall of 1999 and advancing to the semi-finals of the tourney this past season before falling to top-seeded and unbeaten Norwell in a game many felt the better team lost.

"I know that might sound crazy, but that's just the way it feels for me," said Erik. "Obviously, there's a higher caliber of play in (MAPLE), but there's just something special about playing with the kids you grew up with and who you see every day in school."

Actually, it doesn't sound crazy at all.

Skippers struggle to put it all together

motivation

"I think they've seen that no team in this league is unbeatable," noted Knurek. "On any given day, any team can beat another. So far we've only been on the wrong side of that, but we've got to believe that's going to change."

The Skippers must make that belief a reality six times in their remaining nine games if they're to finish with a .500 record and qualify for the state tourney.

That task became a little more daunting last week when the team lost staff ace and number three hitter Nick Bolster to a partially detached retina. The malady was not the result of anything the junior did (at least so far as he knows); rather he just woke up with it one morning last week. He's had problems with the eye before, so surgery was deemed the best course. The procedure was performed Tuesday morning.

The likelihood of Bolster's return to baseball this season was unknown at the time of this writing. Knurek, to his credit, insists that he's not even thinking about the situation in those terms right now.

"We're talking about his vision here," said coach K. "You don't mess around with that for baseball."

Youth laxers continue to roll

Contributed by Chuck Jaffe

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program played seven games last weekend, winning six and continuing an outstanding season.

The weekend's action started Friday, May 4 when the Cohasset Blue12-and-Under team hosted an unbeaten squad from Scituate.

In a pitched battle, Cohasset jumped out to a lead, only to have Scituate battle back twice. Cohasset opened the scoring with goals from Charlie Czerkawski, Parker Berg and Chris Mills. Scituate then gained the momentum and outscored Cohasset 4-2 for the rest of the period, closing the gap to 5-4 despite goals from Berg and Nick Zappolo. Cohasset then extended its lead to 8-4, shutting Scituate out during the second quarter, only to have the opponents bounce back in the third stanza so that the contest went into the final quarter at 9-8 Blue.

Scituate tied the score early in the fourth quarter, and appeared to have the momentum, when Dan Trendowicz finished a spectacular play by shooting while on the seat of his pants and connecting for his second goal of the game. Adam Smith and Justin Connors contributed their first goals of the season, and Chris Davis scored his second of the game as Cohasset pulled away to close the game at 13-9.

Mark Flibotte also scored twice for Cohasset, with Berg, Mills and Michael Bunstein picking up assists on the day.

Meanwhile, in Norwell, the Cohasset 14-and-Under squad jumped out to a 6-0 lead that it never relinquished. While Norwell cut the deficit to two at one point, it could never get back into the game.

Scoring was spread evenly with multiple goal games from Sam Steele, Jake Previte, and John Grimm. Zack Etkind scored his first goal of the year off a nice feed from Previte and Billy Carbone closed the scoring out to make the final score 11-6. Chris Simms was strong again in the goal with several excellent saves to help the team build its big early lead.

The day ended in Cohasset, where the 10-and-Under squad hosted an unbeaten team from Charlestown in a seesaw battle that lasted nearly until dark.

Cohasset jumped out to a first quarter lead of 3-0, with goals coming from Jack Murphy, Andrew Bell and James Reichardt. Charlestown responded in the second quarter, cutting the lead and then trading goals so that the game was 6-5 at the half. Cohasset's second quarter goals came from Chris Walsh, Danny Brady, Owen Landon and Chris Brown.

The second half continued to be highly competitive, with both squads making fine offensive plays and coming up with key defensive stops.

Cohasset's defensive was lead by quality goaltending from Wes Ulmer and Logan Chase. When the final whistle blew, Cohasset was on top 11-9. Cohasset's second half goals came from Andrew Bell, Justin Yeager, Will Wise, Eamon

Davis and Reichardt, with Paul Guinee adding an assist.

The little guys then started the action on Sunday, May 6, as Cohasset hosted three teams from Martha's Vineyard and one from Norwell.

Fresh from Friday night's challenge, the Cohasset 10-and-Under squad was ready from the opening whistle, displaying fine play at all areas of the field. Cohasset seemed to be getting all the ground balls and jumped out to a 5-1 halftime lead on the strength of two goals from Ivan Sceery, one each from Eamon Davis and Will Wise and a goal and assist from Chris Brown. Wes Ulmer was strong in the goal during the first half.

Cohasset continued its strong play in the second half, adding five more goals to close out a 10- 3 win. Second half goals game from John Kearney, Chris Brown, Jack Murphy, Gabriella Flibotte and Ian Quinlan, with Murphy adding an assist.

Next, Cohasset Blue took the field and played an impressive game, jumping out to an 8-1 lead before coasting to a 18-10 victory. Michael Bunstein led the way, scoring 5 goals and three assists. Peter Ernst and Nick Zappolo each added a hat trick. Mark Flibotte, Charlie Czerkawski, Dan Trendowicz, Chris Davis, Matt Burgess and Adam Smith scored single goals. Parker Berg picked up two assists, with Ernst and Flibotte getting one each.

The last game against the Vineyard was the lone loss of the weekend, a 12-7 setback in a game where Cohasset fell behind and simply could not battle back. It was a complete reversal for the 14-and-Under team compared to Friday's Norwell game; the team got off to a slow start and fell behind 6-0 in the first quarter.

Cohasset cut the lead to 8-3 by half-time and got as close as three goals at 9-6 and 10-7 in the fourth quarter, but ran out of steam and lost 11-7.

John Grimm, Jake Previte, and Sam Steele all scored during the furious comeback attempt. Chris Simms made several outstanding stops over the last three quarters to keep Cohasset in the game. Trevor Brady played strong defense from his midfield position and Aidan Buick had several excellent assists from his attack position.

The weekend closed with the Cohasset White 12-and-Under team playing its way to a sloppy but-successful 11-8 win over Norwell.

Jared Kinch, fully recovered from an injury that forced him to miss the early-season games, fed Chris Mills for the only scoring by either team in the first quarter. Corey Chase accounted for all Cohasset's second-period scoring, netting the ball twice, to equal Norwell's total for the entire first half.

Cohasset extended its lead in the third quarter, with Kinch scoring three times. Hunter Sease's first goal of the season and a Dan Trendowicz-from-Michael Bunstein connection gave the local team a three-goal lead it would never relinquish. The two teams traded goals in the fourth quarter, with Michael Grimm scoring twice for Cohasset and feeding Corey Chase, who finished his hat trick on the day.

Jared Dick, who volunteered for extra goaltending duty — having both played for the Blue team and in a soccer game — had his best game of the season, coming up with 14 saves.

Cohasset Blue is now 4-2 on the season, while Cohasset White is 5-0. The 10-and-Under program is 4-3 and the 14-and-Under program is 4-2.

Flaherty leads strong Cohasset contingent at Weston Invitational

THE EXTRA MILE

With Joe Reardon

Aquila Judge gave the Weston Twilight Invitational spectators a glimpse of the talent that garnered her the state indoor heptathlon championship. The Scituate junior, who has pretty much proven she is the best all-around female track & field athlete in the state, won the 100-meter hurdles with a meet record of 14.8 seconds and dominated the jumping events. Judge took the long jump with a leap of 17 feet, 3-1/4 inches and landed in the pit 35-11-3/4 from the take-off board for her third first-place finish.

Judge's hurdle time eclipsed the 15-flat turned in last spring by Somerville's fine hurdler, Whittly Jourdan. To no one's surprise, Judge's trifecta earned her the meet's Outstanding Athlete Award.

The meet is used as a tuneup for several coaches for this week's league meets and the Coaches Invitational, set for this coming Saturday. The boys' meet will be held in Danvers and the girls will head to Plymouth South to compete.

Judge was one of several individual winners from the South Shore. Cohasset's Catherine Flaherty blitzed the 400-meter field to the tune of 62.5 and Notre Dame's Kourtney Trainor bolted to a win the 300 low hurdles with a time of 47.6. On the boys' side, Cohasset's Peter Maitland's javelin throw of 167-8 was more than far enough to take first place.

Notre Dame's Suzanne Timmons sprinted to a second-place finish in 12.6 in the 100 and Scituate's Kiely Cuddihy was second in the shot put with a heave of 34-11-1/4, one of two personal bests on the day. Cohasset's Liam Martin soared to an impressive 6-2 in the high jump, also good enough for second.

Emily Tansey of Scituate went for the win in the mile in a gutsy race. Tansey was passed for second place in the final 150 yards by Brookline's Vannessa Mazandi. Tansey's time of 5:22.1 was a season best and put her in front of Norwell's Kayla Halloran, who was clocked in 5:24.9.

Scituate High head coach Bill Smith was thoroughly impressed with Tansey's aggressive racing tactics in what has grown to be a very popular and competitive outdoor meet.

"I have to say that it is the best way to compete," he said. "Go for first place. If it doesn't work, the 100-percent effort is the mark of a champion in the making."

In the high jump, Lydia Shute of Norwell and Scituate's Jane Thies were third and fourth, respectively, with identical leaps of 4-10. Thies also placed fifth in the long jump with her 15-7 measurement. George Thibeault of Norwell was in the running in the javelin and finished a strong third with a throw of 162-1.

Alisa Cotter of Norwell was fourth in the 800, bolting across the finish line in 2:28.Notre Dame came up with a pair of fourth-place finishes as Cunningham hurled the shot 34-3-1/4 and Cara McDonough hit 108-3 in the javelin.

Cohasset's Brian Krupczak and Tim Baird ran well in their respective events. Krupczak was fourth in a tough 200 field with a time of 22.8 and Baird ran 4:44 in the mile to finish sixth overall. Norwell's James Galvin's toss of 42-5 in the shot put earned him a fourth-place medal and Steve Laney of Cohasset took sixth in the discus with his 118-9.

Jenna Zarick's 64-flat in the 400 was good for fifth for the Norwell runner and teammate Healy Zarago burned a 28.7 200 for fifth.

On The Roads

Abington swept the top-two places on the women's side at the 2nd Annual Whitman Firefighters Association 5K on April 22. Nicole Cashman crossed the finish line in 22:49 to take home first place, 24 seconds in front of Pam Doherty (23:13). Hanover's Cassandra Clancy finished third overall and won the 40-49 division in 23:20 and Pembroke's Elizabeth Donovan was fourth in the same division with a time of 27:14. Scituate's Paul Brigham ran 24:32 to clinch second in the 60-and-over category and George Anderson, also of Scituate, pushed to a fifth-place showing of 22-39 in the 40-49 group

A pair of Scituate runners won their respective age groups in the Lions Club Run For Sight 5K in Quincy. Ted Coyle was first in the 30-39 group at 18:38 and Scott Newkirk ran away with the 40-49 championship in 18:55. Sharon Iarih of Hingham ran well to take fourth with a time of 25:14 in the 30-39 division.

Cancer survivor pitches in for Relay For Life

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Even though she was diagnosed with breast cancer in October of 1997, Shelly Donze considers herself lucky.

"I'm fortunate to have had the support of my husband, Jeff, and my two children," she said.

Donze is a volunteer with the American Cancer Society's Road to Recovery program which organizes free rides for cancer patients to doctor appointments and radiation treatments.

"I drive people who haven't been as fortunate as I am," she said.

She also feels lucky to still be around for her children. "I lost my mother when I was nine, and I was diagnosed when my daughter was five and son eight," she said. Her children, are now nine and 12, and she is in remission.

"I feel very lucky."
— Shelly Donze

"I feel very lucky," Donze said. Starting next year, Donze, will be coordinator of the program on the South Shore. "It gives me a chance to feel like I'm contributing," she said.

While undergoing treatments in 1998, Donze participated in her first Relay for Life event in Cohasset, as part of the First Parish Church team 'High Spirits.'

Three years later, not only is Donze captaining a team for the second year, but she is also on the event's planning committee. "I was so impressed by it, I decided I had to volunteer for the event and got on the committee," she said.

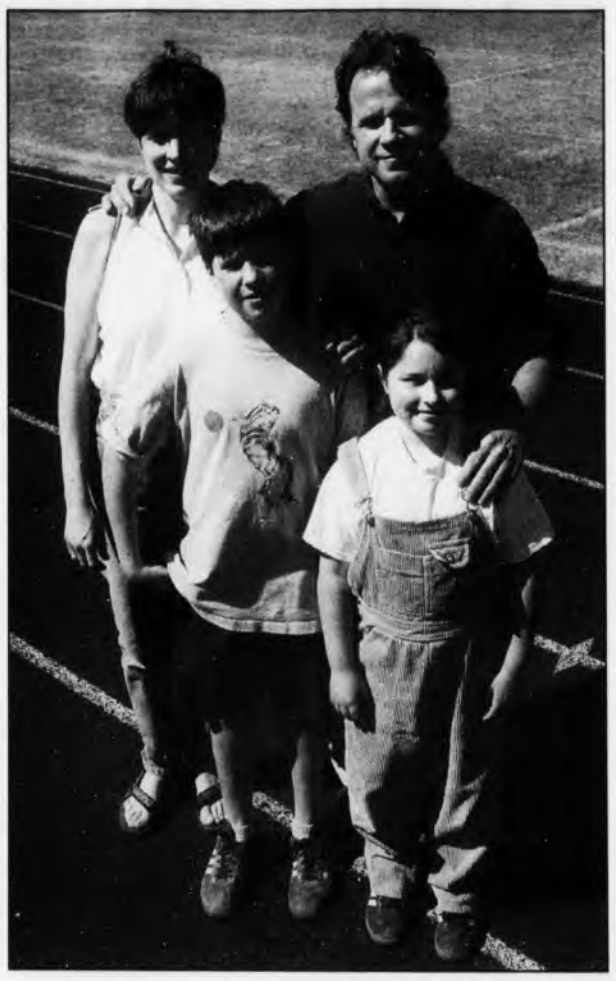
Donze's job this year has been organizing corporate sponsorship. "I've been going around to local businesses in Cohasset and surrounding towns, asking for gift certificates for a special balloon pop," she said. In exchange for a donation, people will be able to choose a balloon containing a gift certificate worth more than their donation. "They'll get a little bit more for their money," she said.

The Relay for Life is now in its fourth year in Cohasset. Last year in Cohasset, 300 participants raised $109,000. Across the state, 36,000 people took part in 34 events, and raised a total of $5 million for the American Cancer Society. Money raised is used for research, education and local services for cancer patients and their families.

This year, the event will start at Cohasset Middle/High School on May 18 at 3 p.m. and conclude May 19 at noon.

Donze's team last year raised slightly more than $6,000 for the fight against cancer — the second highest total of all the teams. This year, Donze, and her 40-member team, have their goals set on the top spot.

"We're aiming for $8,000 this year," she said. "We're definitely growing and I'm very excited to see that."



She also hopes to spend the night on Alumni Field as she did last year for the first time.

The relay is a special time for her, particularly the opening Survivor's Lap, where cancer survivors take a ceremonial lap around the track. Last year, 70 cancer survivors took part in the Survivors' Lap. This year, organizers hope 100 will participate.

"It's like group therapy," Donze said. "Only those people know what you've gone through and what you're feeling."

Luminaria offered

A special luminaria ceremony held during the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life in Cohasset remembers those who have lost the fight to cancer and honors those who have survived. Luminaria candles will be lit at Cohasset High School, May 18 at 9 p.m. to represent those individuals. All members of the local community are invited to the ceremony, regardless of whether or not they are participating in the actual relay event. Anyone desiring to purchase a luminaria candle may do so by calling the American Cancer Society at 1-888-648-4880. A minimum donation of $5 is asked for each luminaria candle.

Maryadelle Burke Coville

Maryadelle Burke Coville

The funeral of Maryadele Burke Colville a dedicated New England Baptist Hospital graduate nurse, mother and wife will be held May 14, at St. Anthony's Church, Cohasset. Mae died after a valiant 12 year struggle with brain cancer which was diagnosed shortly after earning a Business degree at U of California Berkeley. She was 49 years of age. Mae lived in Portola Valley, Calif. and was the wife of Dr. James M. Colville, an Orthopedic Surgeon, and mother of two daughters, Kayley (9 1/2) and Alana,(5 1/2) years old.

Mae was one of the four daughters of Thomas E. and M. Rita Burke, sister of Joanna M. Burke of Malibu, Calif., the late Patricia E. Burke and Andrea M. Burke, Thomas W. Burke of Charlotte, N.C., Christopher J. Burke of Lake Bluff, Ill., and John A. Burke Houston, Texas.

Mae and her brothers and sisters were all born and raised in Cohasset, From Mae's earliest years, nursing was to be her career. Her work as a Pediatric Intensive Care Nurse at Mass General Hospital, and being the Killington, N.H. Mountain Ski Patrol nurse, she found most challenging. As a member of the class of 1970 at Cohasset High School Mae was a unique cheerleader for she taught her six year old sister, Andrea, all the cheers and moves such that Andrea became a most happy squad mascot. Mae never lost her love of the game of hockey having had three brothers that played Pee Wee through college hockey. She and her husband were season ticket holders of the California Sharks hockey team.

Mae's husband was the Olympic Water Polo team's doctor and Mae often traveled the world-over with him. She was an active member of her Portola Valley community mainly volunteering every week in the schools and chairing the pre school's major fund raiser two years in a row. Glass with class

Unique exhibit runs through June 3 at South Shore Art Center

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

The New Hampshire-based husband and wife team of Dan Dailey and Linda MacNeil have something in common within the confines of their art work—glass.

Now, the two artists have brought examples of their innovative pieces to Cohasset's South Shore Art Center in a show called "Art in Glass and Metal." The exhibit opened April 20 and will run through June 3.

Both artists' pride themselves on creating unique fine art pieces with rare kinds of glass, but they both have different ways of going about that task. Dailey's technique is glass-blowing, while MacNeil concentrates on making extravagant pieces of jewelry by cutting and shaping large pieces of glass. Both artists interweave the use of various metals in their art.

"It's an extraordinary opportunity to have this caliber of a show," said Chris Rifkin of the South Shore Art Center. "We're lucky to have it. Both of them have their work displayed in collections around the world."

Dailey has his art work on display overseas at The Louvre, the Kestner Museum in West Germany, the Yokohama Museum in Japan. Here in the states, Dailey displays at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. and the Boston Museum of Fine Arts

MacNeil also has international appeal. Her artwork can be seen at Les Archives de la Cristallerie Daum in France, the Victoria & Albert museum in England, and at Waterford Crystal in Ireland. MacNeil also has pieces at the Smithsonian Institute

The South Shore show is a collection of work completed over two decades.

South Shore Art Center Board of Directors member Chris Rifkin stands amid the "Art in Glass and Metal" exhibit now on display at the Cohasset gallery. New Hampshire artists Dan Dailey and Linda MacNeil are showing 50 of their unique pieces of art through June 3.

"It's a show that we put together from our own collected archive," Dailey said. "There are about 50 pieces all together, all made between 1982 and 1998."

Dailey his glass pieces all have one constant theme—they are all based on the foundation of the shape of a simple vase. Dailey added his work is also heavily influenced by historic time periods like ancient Egypt, and ancient China.

"There's just something about the artistic challenges those people set for themselves when they were working on a certain structure," Dailey said. "I don't feel contemporary art is as engaging."

Dailey said all his pieces are meticulously crafted through a "labor intensive" process. He said the pieces he is displaying at the show are nice examples of the variety of the work he does. He added most of his vases are decorative, not "functional."

Dailey said MacNeil is mainly featuring her "neck pieces" in the show, most of which can be worn.

"There's some geometric influence on her work," Dailey said of his wife, "but there's an interest in organic form as well."

Rifkin said looking at the couple's creations is a magical experience.

"When people see this exhibit, they're not going to believe the pieces are actually made out of glass. Most people have no idea what can be done artistically with glass, but this show is a real eye-opener."

Chris Rifkin, member of the South Shore Art Center Board of Directors

"When people see this exhibit, they're not going to believe the pieces are actually made out of glass," she said. "Most people have no idea what can be done artistically with glass, but this show is a real eye-opener."

Dailey graduated from the Philadelphia College of Art in 1969, and went on to get his masters degree in fine arts from the Rhode Island School of Design, where he took a teaching job. By 1974, Dailey was teaching at the Massachusetts College of Art where he founded the school's glass program. He still teaches there today.

In his first year of teaching at the Rhode Island School of Design, Dailey met MacNeil. By 1977, they were married. They both had different talents, so they were able to draw from each other in terms of different artistic techniques.

"She was really good at working with metal, and I was good with glass," Dailey said. "So we both helped each other out, and our collaboration went on."

The couple also started collecting special kinds of glass for the pieces they were designing.

"We have a supply of rare glass that was only made up until about 1920," Dailey said. "It's an exotic kind of glass that you cannot find anymore. It just isn't. sold these days."

Over the years, both Dailey and MacNeil had to do a lot of traveling as well. About four years ago, their collaborative show "Art in Glass and Metal" was born.

Dailey said the show was formed in the couple's New Hampshire town when the art director of their daughter's high school gallery asked them if they could put on an exhibit. So they did.

"The show has changed slightly since then, but not much," Dailey said. "We enjoyed doing the show at the school, and at the same time, it kept us involved there." The couple did a few shows at different schools around the area, and when Rifkin heard about the quality of work they were putting out, she traveled to one of the exhibits.

"When I first saw the show, I said to myself, 'Wow, I'd love to have that at the art center,'" Rifkin said. "The pieces they made were just so alive. It was just wonderful."

"It's a real treat to have the show here," she said. "It's not painting, and it's not sculpture, but the works come from a fine-craft sensibility."

Dailey said he and MacNeil hope the public can judge the work for themselves.

"I would hope that there's something at the show that engages people, and makes them look long enough to wonder why a given piece exists," Dailey said. "I want people to see past the superficial level, because behind each of the pieces, there is a story."

South Shore native celebrates success of her first novel

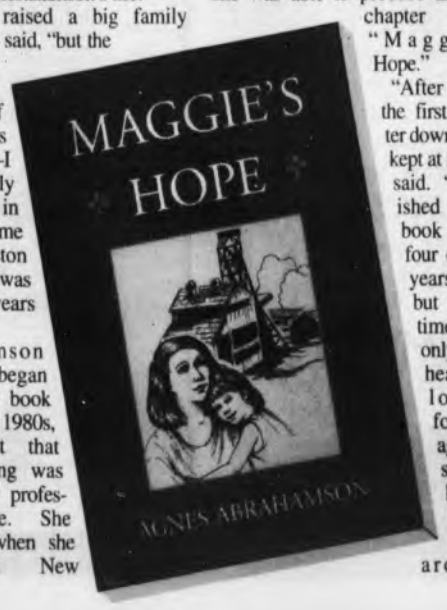
By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

At 74, most folks are enjoying leisure time and retirement.

Agnes Abrahamson is too busy celebrating the release of her first novel "Maggie's Hope."

The former 32-year resident of Scituate raised a family of six children on the South Shore and after traveling around the country with her husband George — they've lived in Florida, New Hampshire and currently Hyde Park — Abrahamson found time to pen her first book.

Many people have told her they find it remarkable she managed to find the patience to write a book at her age.



"I don't think much of my age," she said. "I may be older now, but I'm the same person as I always was. What I find remarkable is that I actually stuck with it."

"Maggie's Hope" is a book about a mother living in a Nova Scotia mining town during the 1920s who is looking for a better life for her family.

"It's about certain hardships that people have to endure," Abrahamson said. "It's about a family's struggle to better itself. I think it's a pretty good story."

Although the novel is a work of fiction, some of its elements were born out of Abrahamson's life.

"Well, I raised a big family myself," she said, "but the other autobiographical aspect of the book is the setting—I was actually born in Canada. I came to the Boston area when I was just two years old."

Abrahamson said she began writing the book during the 1980s, because at that time, writing was part of her professional life. She explained when she lived in New Hampshire, she was a writer at a magazine, and when she moved to Florida, she worked as a reporter for the Tampa Tribune.

"I always had the book in the back of my mind," Abrahamson said. But what brought the first chapter out of her mind was a creative writing class she took. After she finished the class, she was able to produce the first chapter of "Maggie's Hope."

"After I got the first chapter down, I just kept at it," she said. "I finished the book about four or five years ago, but at that time, I only half-heartedly looked for an agent. I sort of let the book just sit around, but then one of my daughters encouraged me to do something with it."

Now, Abrahamson is looking forward to book signings, enjoying the fruits of her labor, and even writing a sequel to "Maggie's Hope." She added she is not at a shortage for literary ideas.

"That's one of the funny things about writing," Abrahamson said, "you really don't know where your ideas come from—it just happens. The idea's come, you sharpen them up, and you put them down on paper. Then, you sort of lose yourself in all of it. I get really involved in my writing. Sometimes I almost feel like the characters I create are real people. They start leaping out at me."

Abrahamson said her writing is inspired by her own life, but it is also influenced by her sense of spirituality.

"I like to get lost in my work and I'm quite a spiritual person, so when I'm writing, I think of the whole universe, God, and just the overall beauty of the world. I also think of my grandchildren."

Abrahamson has 15 of them, and four great-grandchildren as well.

Abrahamson said she will keep writing as long as she can, and she said it is a pastime she would recommend to anyone. But she added she thinks great writers are simply destined to be discovered.

"If you were born to be a writer, it's going to come out," she said. "With me, it didn't happen until I was in my 50s, but the point is that it did happen, and I'm very content with that. I have a good life, and love keeping my mind busy."

Simple steamed potatoes

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

The simplest recipes are often the best, especially when it comes to a vegetable side dish which should display the essence of the main ingredient without unnecessary folderol. In the case of potatoes, it's best not to bury the scented, loamy taste of freshly dug potatoes with an excess of butter, cream, or cheese. Small red potatoes, if treated with respect, also do a very nice job of showing off the main dish, playing an important but purely secondary role. Loyal subjects know it's dangerous to dress better than the king.

The first test, of course, was which type of potatoes is best for steaming. I tried russet, Yukon gold and red potatoes, the russets being too dry and crumbly for this preparation. The Yukon gold potatoes were also on the dry side but the red potatoes held their shape nicely and were moist and creamy to boot. Be warned that there is more than one type of red potato in the market. For this recipe, I preferred golf ball or smaller-sized potatoes often referred to as red creamers which can be halved and then steamed in just 12 minutes. If you can find only larger specimens, cut them into one-inch dice before cooking. I tested steaming versus boiling and preferred the former since the potatoes were more likely to maintain their shape.

The next question was how to dress steamed potatoes. I wanted to be able to serve this dish hot, warm, or at room temperature and therefore, butter was out since it would solidify as it cooled. Olive oil, therefore, was the lubricant of choice. For herbs, I experimented with rosemary, oregano, thyme, parsley, chive, marjoram, cilantro, tarragon, basil, and arugula. Many of these herbs proved to be too powerful for simple steamed potatoes so I ended up with a combination of chives and parsley. As for other additions, I tried mustard seed, celery seed, prepared mustard, garlic, anchovies, chopped olives, and pesto but they were all either too strong or a bit too flamboyant. I didn't want a dressy salad – I wanted a simple dish of steamed potatoes. Shallots, however, were a nice addition as was salt and pepper. This is one recipe were simplicity is paramount.

STEAMED POTATOES WITH CHIVES, SHALLOTS, AND PARSLEY

Although this dish can be served hours after cooking, I found that dressing the spuds while hot and then serving them immediately was ideal since hot potatoes absorb the flavors of the herbs and oil.

2 pounds red potatoes, golf-ball sized or smaller, washed and halved (if using larger red potatoes simply cut them into a one-inch dice)
4 tablespoons best quality olive oil
4 tablespoons finely chopped chives

3 tablespoons finely chopped flat leaf parsley
1 medium shallot, finely chopped, about 2 tablespoons
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground black pepper

Place the potatoes on a steamer above boiling water, cover, and steam for about 10 to 12 minutes or until fork tender. Transfer the potatoes to a large mixing bowl and add the remaining ingredients. Toss well and serve immediately or allow to cool to room temperature.

Serves 6 as a side dish.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, MAY 10

The planet Neptune begins retrograde travel at 9:13 p.m., 9-degrees of Aquarius. Its influence enhances artistic sensitivity, intuitive ability. You can make great progress developing creative projects, hobbies, arts and crafts. On the other hand, this is not a time for making practical decisions. It may be difficult to separate the facts from the wishful thinking. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Mars at 3:19 p.m. and becomes inactive until 5:10 p.m., when a Capricorn moon takes over. Mercury aligns with Venus at 7:47 p.m.; Mercury and Venus align with Neptune in the late evening.

FRIDAY, MAY 11

Every two years the planet Mars travels in retrograde motion for approximately ten weeks. It often generates much upheaval in the world. Mars represents struggles within and with others. It brings a time to slow down, back up, reconsider, think things through. Mars turns retrograde at 29-degrees of Sagittarius, 12:08 p.m. Mars remains in retrograde motion until July 19. The moon continues to travel in pragmatic Capricorn. Zero in on responsibilities you have take on, commitments you have made and follow through.

SATURDAY, MAY 12

This is a day to get things done. You can be most productive, if you have a clear plan of action and stick to it. Initiate new activities before 12:17 p.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with the sun and becomes inactive. Plan a quiet evening.

SUNDAY, MAY 13

The moon enters Aquarius at 4:20 a.m., interacting with Saturn in the morning and Neptune this evening. In addition, the sun prepares to form a 90-degree alignment to Uranus, the planetary ruler of Aquarius. Avoid rigid time schedules. Most likely things won't go as planned. Take a break from routine and responsibility today. Do something different. Be more adventurous and spontaneous.

MONDAY, MAY 14

A 180-degree alignment of Mercury and Pluto can put a damper on today's mood. Try not to concern yourself with situations you can't change. Let go of past traumas and hurts. Forgive and forget. Signing contracts or making major decisions are definitely off limits. It is better to finish old projects rather than starting anything new. The moon continues its travel in Aquarius, and the applying sun/Uranus alignment warns you to expect the unexpected. Go with the flow.

TUESDAY, MAY 15

Gear up for a hectic morning. There are likely to be unexpected delays, setbacks, surprises. The last quarter phase of the moon begins at 6:11 a.m. However, the planet Uranus takes center stage. The moon and Uranus conjoin at 6:25 a.m. The sun forms a 90-degree alignment to Uranus at 9:06 a.m. The Aquarius moon becomes inactive at 2:53 p.m. until 5:01 p.m., when a Pisces moon takes over. An applying alignment of Mercury/Jupiter prompts you to catch up on correspondence or phone calls this evening.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 16

After the barrage of planetary activity in the past ten days, influences now offer a chance to rest and recharge your batteries. Mercury and Jupiter come together at 7:15 a.m., 16-degrees of Gemini, generating an upbeat, talkative mood. In addition, the moon travels in laidback Pisces. It may be difficult to focus on facts and figures. Postpone working on projects that require mental concentration and attention to detail. Instead, be more creative; music and art get the green light. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

THURSDAY, MAY 17

Fair and sunny astrological weather continues today. The moon travels in adaptable Pisces, interacting with Jupiter and Mercury in the morning and the sun this evening. This is a great day for vacationing. If you are working, be creative. Enjoy a romantic evening with the love in your life.

Plant and Enjoy the Glorious Blooms of Springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Part 2

The welcome greening of our lawns, gardens and landscapes, highlighted by the appearance of colorful spring-flowering trees and shrubs, has set another planting and growing season in motion. Garden centers are bustling with activity as homeowners eagerly search for new plants to beautify their properties and new products to simplify their yard work. Truckloads of healthy, robust nursery stock can barely be unloaded quickly enough to satisfy enthusiastic customers desperate to work the soil and perform their annual spring planting ritual.

Before making your selections, particularly of larger, more permanent woody plants, be sure to analyze your site and determine a suitable location for your acquisitions based on their soil and light requirements and their ultimate size. Small scale, ornamental trees are usually preferred for foundation plantings, gardens, or smaller properties. Larger trees tend to be better for open spaces where they can provide shade or screening.

Look for trees and shrubs which offer multiple seasons of interest. While the appearance of flowers seems to be the primary concern of most homeowners, most flowering trees and shrubs bloom for a very brief period, perhaps a week or two at most. Consider other attributes, as well, including attractive forms during the winter months, mottled or exfoliating bark, colorful fruit, handsome foliage throughout the season or fantastic fall color.

There are so many magnificent, blooming trees this spring, including cherries, magnolias and pears, but few rival the grace and year-round beauty of our American dogwoods (Cornus Florida). Their unique flowers, elegant fall foliage, colorful fruit and attractive winter silhouettes make them an invaluable asset to any landscape. They are truly a tree for all seasons. Native to the eastern half of the U.S., dogwoods are clothed in spectacular flower clusters of white, pink or red just as the foliage begins to break. The showiest parts of these flowers are actually four, brightly-colored, notched bracts, not petals, with the true, tiny yellow flowers to be found in the center of the cluster. In autumn, small, shiny, brilliant red fruits are borne but are often quickly devoured by wildlife. When the handsome, deep scarlet to bronze foliage drops, the horizontal branching presents a lovely, distinctive form throughout the dormant months.

The American dogwood's natural habitat as an understory plant in forests, shaded by larger, hardwood trees, makes it ideally suited to the partially shaded landscape. Well-drained, organic soils are preferred as heavy, poorly drained soils usually lead to their demise. Dogwoods are shallow-rooted trees and the application of a 4-inch layer of mulch is recommended, especially if the specimen is to be grown in full sun, to help maintain cooler soil temperatures and assist with water retention. Supplemental water should be provided during periods of drought, preferably by means of a soaker hose as wetting the foliage may lead to leaf diseases.

Proper planting and regular maintenance of dogwoods is critical to produce healthy specimens. Stressed trees may be weakened and are subsequently more susceptible to a variety of pests and diseases. Dogwood anthracnose, in particular, has become a problem in recent years and is characterized by large, purple-bordered leaf spots and brown patches beginning on the tips of the foliage. Prune and destroy the diseased branches and monitor the tree throughout the season, providing a deep soaking once a week during periods of drought. This disease should not be confused with spot anthracnose which appears as tiny spots the size of a pinhead all over the foliage and is promoted by damp weather, particularly in spring as the flowers open. While unsightly, this latter disease does not cause serious damage to the trees.

The fiery orange-red blossoms of flowering quince bushes (Chaenomeles spp.) provide a stunning contrast to the sunny yellow blooms of forsythia and daffodils and white flowering dogwoods. These vigorous, usually thorny shrubs display stunning early spring flowers which seem to be favorites with the returning orioles and hummingbirds. Available in a wide variety of flower colors including shades of pink, salmon, white, orange and red, the flowering quince is adaptable to most well-drained soils given full sun or light shade. Glossy deep green leaves provide an elegant backdrop for the clusters of blossoms. Aromatic, apple-like fruits, in shades of green and yellow, follow later in the season and are popular with some gardeners who value the fruits for making jellies. There are both upright and slightly more sprawling cultivars from which to choose.

Join the Hanover Garden Club in Hanover Center at the Congregational Church Hall on Saturday, May 19, for their annual plant sale. Doors open at 9:30. The small shrubs and perennials sell out quickly, so come early for best selection. Nearby, in the town hall parking lot, the Walnut Hill Garden Club of Hanover will be hosting its annual geranium sale. Both clubs' proceeds are used toward town beautification projects.

Reeds don't sway state

Grant effort is denied

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state has denied Cohasset's application for a $50,000 grant to cut down unwelcome tall reeds growing around Jacobs Meadow, and spread rock salt around the area.

The news is a setback for the town, which is in the process of creating a salt marsh restoration plan for Jacob's Meadow, with the help of Tutela Enginnering

"We have found tidal flows will control the growth and eventually kill off phragmites."
— State wetlands program

Tutela and the town, applied for the grant last month through the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs' Wetlands Restoration Program. Approximately $9,000 of the grant money would have been used to cut down and dispose of 0.8 acres of the reeds, called "phragmites." Another $17,000 was earmarked for two applications of rock salt to prevent the reeds from growing back.

Tutela engineer Thomas Keefe said salt rock application has been

Selectmen sign Greenbush pact

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset selectmen made history Tuesday when they unanimously voted to enter into a Greenbush mitigation agreement with the MBTA.

By signing the deal, the board ended years of wrangling and debate over proper mitigation measures and reparations for restoration of the long-dormant Greenbush commuter rail line.

"I think we have a very good agreement," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "We have come a long way and have a significantly better agreement than the one in January.

"It's time we sign the document and move forward."

The deal could be a veritable windfall for Cohasset, with the potential of bringing more than $5 million into the town. The MBTA has committed $1.2 million for the completion of the James Brook Flood Control project, $250,000 to relocate the Sohier Street well, support of a $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant from MassHighway and to reconstruct the town parking lot to town specifications.

The town had initially announced a deal in January, but public outcry forced the town back to the negoti-

Major changes are proposed for common historic district

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission will hold public hearings on May 29 to discuss a number of proposed additions to buildings within the district.

The proposals include a major addition to the side of the First Parish Church parish house; a 16-foot by 20-foot wing addition to the South Shore Community Center; and an expanded roof and side porch on the Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House at 63 Highland Ave.

More than 30 people jammed into the first-floor meeting room in Cohasset Town Hall Monday to discuss the proposed expansion of the parish house, located at 19 North Main St.

Josiah Stevenson, the church's building committee chairman, called the existing parish hall, which was built in the 1960's, "ugly and not well constructed." The new wing would more than double the footprint of the existing hall, while remaining within the necessary setbacks from the property line. The church also proposed building a nearly eight-foot deep, glass-enclosed vestibule onto the front of the carriage house, which houses the church's day care center.

Stevenson and the church appeared before the commission last year, and said the new plans reflected the suggestions made by the commission at that meeting.

However, the majority in attendance quickly nixed the idea of building anything onto the front of the carriage house. David Wadsworth, the curator for the Cohasset Historical Society, said the carriage house remains nearly identical to how it looked when built nearly 200 years ago.

He hinted that major changes to the building, particularly changing the front of the carriage house, could possibly result in the parish house being dropped by the National Register from the historic district.

Town Historical Commission Chairman Noel Ripley worried about the possible "loss of integrity" the parish house would suffer as a result of a "mud porch."

Children currently walk through the house to reach the day-care center. Stevenson said the purpose of putting a vestibule on the front of the carriage house was so the church could "separate" the day care center from the rest of the house.

The commission recommended creating a walkway around the side of the carriage house and creating

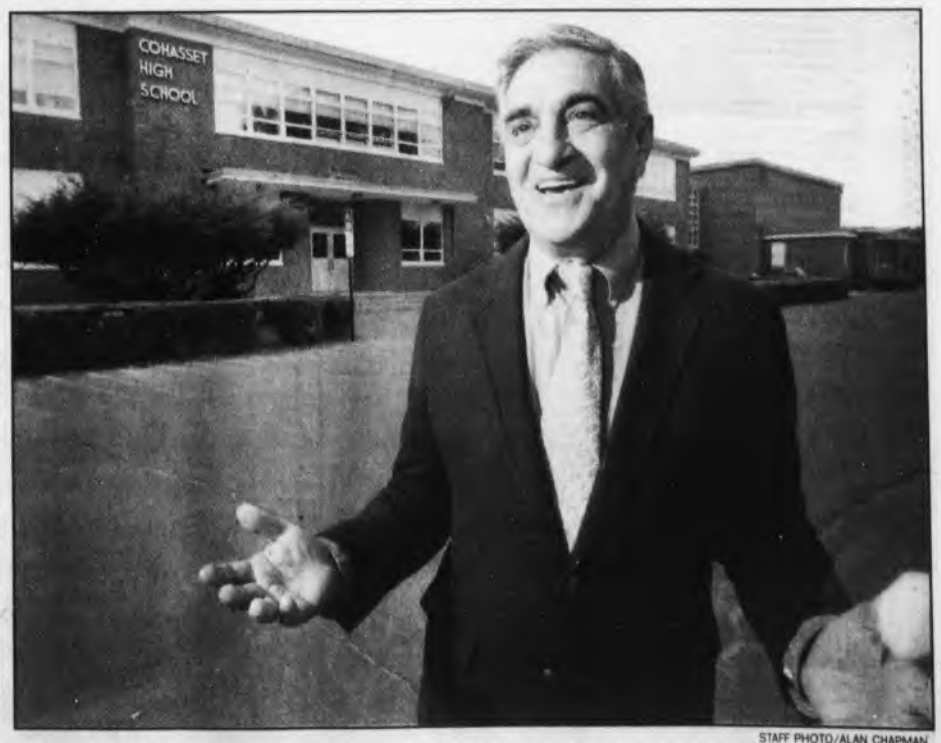
Alumnus recalls 'the good old days'

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM



Back in his day, Cohasset High School athletes had to walk home after games and practices, even in the middle of winter.

Jim Lagrotteria was a student at Cohasset High School in the early 1950's, when it was still a three-story wooden building on Elm Street.

"Football and baseball players had to walk to Milliken Field, and then walk back," he remembers. "There were no showers and then we had to walk home. Not only did we have to play the game, we had to find our way home. For those of us that lived on the north side of town or Beechwood, that was a hell of a walk."

Up until the 11th grade, Lagrotteria attended the Osgood School — the original name for the Water commission signs contract

Will improve distribution system

The Water Commission, at its meeting May 10, signed a contract for $594,246 with the Biszco Company for the latest phase, Phase A-1, of the Water Commissions distribution system improvement program.

In this contract, which will start in a few weeks, the Water Commission will: clean & line Beechwood Street (Rt. 3A - Riverview Drive), Elm Street, and Summer Street, replace 900 ins. of undersized 6-in. pipe on Border Street with 8-in. ductile iron pipe, replacing undersized 6-in. pipe on Rustic Drive with 8" ductile iron pipe.

"Since 1995, the Water Commission has improved a total of about 9 miles of the 36 miles of the water distribution system."
— John K. McNabb, Jr., chairman

"This project will improve water quality and pressure to many areas of Cohasset," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb. "These areas have substandard fire flows that will be brought up to proper standards by this work, to improve public safety.

"Since 1995, the Water Commission has improved a total of about 47,000 feet, or 9 miles of the 36 miles of the water distribution system. While we have made many improvements, there is still much work to be done."

The Water Department is also making progress on other water system improvements, said McNabb, including:

Starting Tuesday, May 15, the Bear Hill tank was drained, and then cleaned, inspected, repaired (if necessary), sandblasted, and repainted. This project will take about 60 days.

A total of 20 fire hydrants are being replaced in a project that began in January. On May 11, one of the oldest fire hyrants, on Highland Ave., was replaced.

Undersized pipes on Howard Gleason Road and Hugh Strain Road have recently been replaced.

Red Lion eyes mid-June completion

Could face ZBA hearing for signs

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Renovation work at the Red Lion Inn is expected to be finished by mid-June, says owner Gerd Ordelheide.

The inn, originally built in 1704, has been undergoing a multi-million dollar renovation and expansion for nearly two years. The work has included a complete renovation of the building's interior, renovation of the adjoining Lilac House, a walkway joining the two buildings on the second floor, and the creation of an expansive barn function hall.

"Everything is moving along great," Ordelheide said of the work.

Although the project is in the home stretch, town Building Inspector Robert Egan sent Ordelheide a letter last week reminding him of several construction issues that need to be addressed before a permanent occupancy permit is issued.

"It was kind of a little wrap-up of things," Egan said. "They haven't been resolved yet, and I just want to get something in writing at this stage.

"It's nothing that can't be resolved quickly."

Among the unresolved issues are the six-foot fence separating the inn from its abutters, promised brick sidewalks along South Main Street, the screening of a dumpster near the barn entrance, the installation of an elevator in the barn, and a compliance affidavit signed by a registered architect for the barn.

Ordelheide said the leftover items were "minor things," and would be taken care of quickly, including finishing the landscaping around the waterfall and pool areas. The elevator is scheduled to be delivered within the next two weeks, he said.

The one possible hang-up concerns the number of Red Lion Inn signs on the property. Egan said in his letter that "there is no provision in town bylaws to 'split-up' signs," and that because the signs were not included in the building permit, "any deviation from the bylaw is at the discretion of the board of appeals."

However, Egan also said it shouldn't be a problem because the total area of all the signs combined doesn't exceed the allowed area in the bylaws.

"The bylaw may not have envisioned something like this," said Egan. "If he had put them all on one sign he would be fine. But there's no provision to split them up."

Ordelheide doesn't think the town will have a problem with the multiple signs.

"They look great," he said. "They're hand carved and look nice for the town."

Helping seniors to stay safe at home

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

To many seniors, the notion of falling down and being unable to get back up is not a joke, nor is it to their families.

Many seniors live alone, or with family members who go away to work every morning. If something was to happen to them — a slip, a fall, a dizzy spell — they may not be discovered for hours, or possibly days.

As a result, the Norfolk County Sheriff's Office is introducing the "Are You OK?" automated telephone system to towns around the county as a way to help seniors remain safe in their homes.

The Cohasset Elder Affairs office will sponsor an informational meeting with Norfolk County Sheriff Michael Bellotti at the South Shore Community Center on Wednesday, May 23 at 10:30 a.m. to discuss the program.

"It's really a very good program," said Carol Barrett, the outreach worker for the elder affairs office. "Police have gone out to homes and found someone who has fallen, and not been able to get back up. If it's in the kitchen or in the basement they could be there for two or three days."

Seniors who enroll in the program, which is run out of the sheriff's office, will receive a phone call every day between 6 a.m. and noon. An automated voice will ask the senior if he or she is 'OK?' If the answer is 'No,' a dispatcher will pick up the phone, find out what's wrong, and notify the local police department. Or, if a senior doesn't answer the phone at all, it will try again a few minutes later. If there still is no answer, the local police department will be dispatched to the house.

According to Dave Falcone, a spokesperson for the sheriff's office, in its first month of operation, the program has already helped save three seniors in Stoughton and Braintree.

"They have the same program in Plymouth County and it's been very successful there, so Sheriff Bellotti wanted to bring the program here," Falcone said. "And we've seen results right away."

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan thinks the program is great for the town's seniors.

"All they have to do is notify us, and we can shoot over there," he said. "Hopefully it will never be anything more than someone out watering their garden or on call-waiting."

Noonan said the police department does conduct well-being checks on seniors, if requested, but the "Are You Ok?" program will be able to help the department track the calls.

Falcone said if a senior is going to be away for a day, he or she is able to call the sheriff's office and ask not to be called. He hopes to bring Cohasset and every other community in Norfolk County online "very soon."

Barrett said the program can be very helpful for homebound residents. Even though the elder affairs office has a friendly visitor reassurance call program, it's only available a couple of days a week. The "Are You OK?" program is available 365 days a year.

"This is more that we can do to help an elder stay in their environment," she said. "That is really our goal."

For more information, or a ride to the meeting, seniors can call the Cohasset Elder Affairs office at 781-383-9112.

Major changes are proposed for common historic district

the entrance in the back. Stevenson said the building committee would discuss it.

The board also shot down the design for a set of full-length windows on the exterior of the new hall.

Nicholas Noon, of 11 North Main St., said the windows were "jarring" and "out of character with the common."

Elizabeth Stevenson, of 13 North Main St., was concerned about the amount of light that would emit from the new parish hall at night.

Stevenson said he would ask the architects to redesign the hall windows, and bring the two changes back to the board's May 29 meeting.

The hearing was delayed at the start of the meeting because the majority of the commission, including chairman Jacqueline Clark, recused themselves from the discussion because they are members of First Parish Church. The remaining members did not constitute a quorum. Commission member Mary Larson had to track down fellow member David Buick in order to hold the hearing.

South Shore Community Center – 3 North Main Street

Ed Salerno of the South Shore Community Center said the group is looking to build a small, four-room addition off the south end of the building, similar to one that was there decades ago.

The community center had received permission to construct the wing 10 years ago, when it built the existing north wing, but was never constructed because of a lack of funds.

"I always thought the building looked a bit off-balance," Noon said.

Salerno said the wing would consist of four offices including one for the center's director.

However, the commission said the sketch Salerno brought to the meeting wasn't the one approved 10 years ago, and asked him to the May 29 meeting with more detailed plans.

David Wadsworth, the curator for the historical society, said the carriage house remains nearly identical to how it looked 200 years ago.

Captain Samuel Bates Jr. House – 63 Highland Avenue

House owner Charles Furtado proposed a number of changes to the house, including enlarging the roof over the rear of the house, expanding the three-season room on the north end of the house, and other small aesthetic changes to the structure's exterior.

The commission expressed its most concern regarding the expanded roof. Furtado said he hoped to expand the master bedroom over the rear of the house. However, neighbor Carolyn Horn said an expanded roof could cut down on the amount of sunlight hitting her property. Furtado showed a turn-of-the century photograph of the house which shows a much larger roof than the existing one.

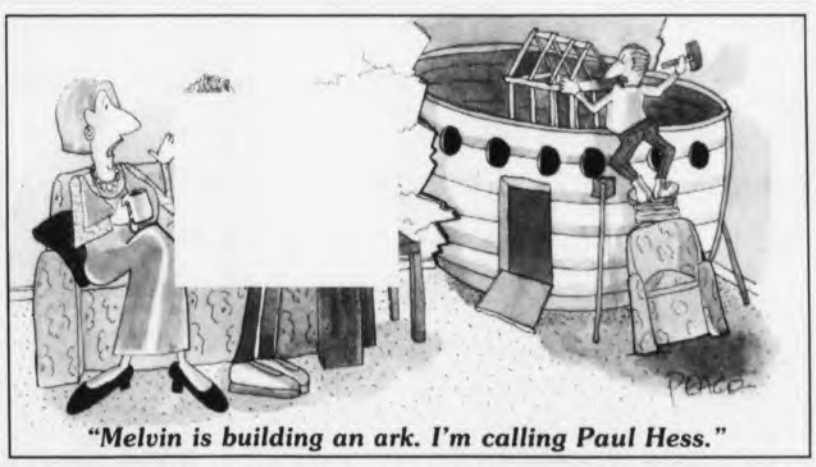
He also hopes to expand the three-season porch, which overlooks Little Harbor, make it a year-round room, and also make a walk-out balcony from the second floor. The commission asked Furtado to redesign the balcony's railing, and to also stake out the expansion's footprint.

The commission welcomed the proposed changes to the exterior of the garage, saying it would look like an old carriage house.

The work will be further analyzed at the May 29 meeting.

Furtado, who bought the house in 1999, had come under fire by some neighbors for the installation of two attic windows on the house's north side. Furtado has since received permission from the commission for the window installation, and also got a green light to re-side the house, which is ongoing.

Furtado said the current gray color is from the factory-primed clapboards, and will be again painted white once the work is finished.



The Cohasset Common Historic District includes the houses and buildings that surround the common, as well as the houses along North Main Street down to Sohier Street. It also includes St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, which sits high atop the granite ledge at the south end of the common.

The commission was created in 1978 as a town bylaw, and is made up of district residents, architects and realtors. Under the bylaw, "no building or structure within the district shall be altered or constructed in any way that affects exterior architectural features" without prior approval from the commission.

Free community workshop Saturday

The Massachusetts Bays National Estuary Program will host a free workshop from noon-4 p.m., May 19 at Marshfield Town Hall to provide South Shore community leaders with new planning tools that will foster creative solutions to regional land use challenges. This workshop will provide a forum for open discussion and information sharing within and between towns that will lead to improved natural resource protection and planning in this rapidly developing region. Registration is required. Call 617-626-1229 or email alison.demong@state.ma.us. Lunch is provided.

The day will begin with a discussion of how South Shore towns faired with passing the Community Preservation Act and then the Metropolitan Area Planning Council will then unveil a South Shore Growth Impacts Study.

Local man is captain of Boston Harbor

US Coast Guard Capt. Brian M. Salerno is back in town thanks to his new position as Commanding Officer, Marine Safety Division in Boston.

Capt. Salerno, 47, grew up here in Cohasset. His parents Gertrude "Trudy" and Nicolas Salerno live on Ledge Way.

Brian and his wife Alice have two sons, Brendan, 17, and Michael, 10. They've been house hunting and want to live on the South Shore.

They have lived all over the place!

Just to name a few — in the early 1990s, Brian served in Portland, Maine. Then the Salernos moved to San Juan, Puerto Rico, where Brian managed the federal responses to several large vessel groundings, and port safety and environmental responses to several hurricanes.

For the past year, he served as the Marine Safety Advisor to the Panama Canal Authority, as a member of the U.S. Embassy in Panama City.

Brian was officially sworn in for his new duties in Boston Harbor on May 11.

The commanding officer of the Marine Safety Office – who is also referred to as Captain of the Port – exercises broad jurisdiction and is tasked with the responsibility of carrying out a wide variety of Coast Guard missions.

Capt. Salerno, who will be at his new post for three years, is a 1999 graduate of the US Army War College and holds a master's degree from John Hopkins University.

Logan charms crowd at benefit in her honor

Hosts first-annual symposium

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Move over Dolley Madison – here comes Cohasset's Polly Logan.

Madison, who is featured in a new book titled "Parlor Politics" by Catherine Allgor, was one of the First Ladies in the early 1800s who "used the unofficial social sphere to cement the relationships that politics need to work."

Although nearly two centuries have passed since Mrs. James Madison charmed Washington, Logan — known as the first lady of South Shore political circles — knows all too well that social settings can yield big political rewards.

Friday, the formal Victorian ballroom at the Fairmont Copley Plaza in Boston provided the perfect example. Looking radiant in a Louis Feraud suit in tropical, citrus colors that would have made Madison envious — Logan, whose charisma is only matched by her ability to engage anyone in conversation — took center stage at the First Annual Polly Logan Fund Symposium.

"You could fill a stadium with all the people she has mentored in some way and brought into politics."
— Peter Forman, Gov. Swift's chief of staff

Allgor, who is assistant history professor at Simmons College, was the featured speaker at the $125-a-head luncheon last Friday. And thanks to the Center for Women in Politics and Public Policy at the University of Massachusetts at Boston – beneficiary of the Polly Logan Fund – fewer women will have to rely on their social skills to achieve power.

However, as Allgor pointed out, the First Ladies of the early 19th century knew how to work a room. Although they no doubt, were a tad more conservative than Logan, who is a thoroughly modern woman.

A smiling Logan greeted the 200-plus guests with nary missing a name or a short biographical sketch about each person she met or introduced to someone else.

With her ever-present laugh and sense of humor, Logan delivered part of her remarks in the form of a jingle.

"We won't rebuild roads where they currently exist,
We will erect road signs, expand reach, create a new twist.
We'll be trailblazers, guiding women, to true activism,
Shaping attitudes, and nurturing public careerism.."

On a more serious note, Logan, a former Hingham resident, said increased participation of women in the political process is good for all.

"It ensures women will have an equal say in the critical issues that affect everyone like the economy, defense, health care and the environment," she said.

There were plenty of men at the bipartisan event that unabashedly promoted women's involvement in government..

Among them was former state representative and Plymouth County Sheriff Peter Forman, who is now Gov. Jane Swift's chief of staff.

Logan began serving as a mentor to Forman when he was a teenager in Plymouth who was interested in politics.

"She has radar for this," he said. "You could fill a stadium with all the people she has mentored in some way and brought into politics."

Although Logan, a Cohasset resident and vice chairman of the state Republican Party, backs the GOP – her many friends at the symposium came for both sides of the political aisle.

Logan said she was proud to be affiliated with an effort that can help women through scholarships and internships.

"Your thoughtful, committed support of the Polly Logan Fund and the Center for Women in Politics and Public Policy, we will change the world," she said.

Cohasset bicyclist to ride for cancer

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

There's nothing like taking your bike out on a warm, summer's evening, strapping on a helmet and taking a "quick" bike ride to Cape Cod and back.

That's what Pleasant Street resident James Clark does. Usually at least three times a week, Clark will hop on his bike, join up with some friends and make the long journey down and back.

And Clark hopes to use his love of bike-riding to raise money for the Jimmy Fund when he participates in the 192-mile Pan-Mass Challenge this August.

"I'm looking very forward to it," said Clark, owner of his own electric company, and six-year town resident, along with his wife, Leanne. "I'm in really good shape now."

The ride will feature more than 3,500 bicyclists pedaling from Sturbridge to Provincetown over two days. The Pan-Mass Challenge was started in 1980 by 36 riders, and has now grown to the single largest weekend fundraising event in the country. In its first year, the ride raised $10,000 for The Jimmy Fund at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston. This year, organizers hope to raise $13 million.

"The great thing about it is that there is only 7 percent overhead, meaning 93 percent of the money raised goes to the Dana-Farber Institute," Clark said. "That's one of the reasons I'm doing it."

Clark, a Hingham native and 1987 graduate of Hingham High School, said he has only been biking for two years. His weekly biking schedule involves 150 miles of training sometimes with friends, sometimes alone, at a pace of 20 miles per hour.

"It does help to have a couple other riders with you," he said.

Clark, 32, also participates in the Wednesday night bicycle races in Wompatuck State Park in Hingham.

This will be the first time he has participated in the Pan-Mass Challenge, and just his second fund-raiser — his first will be a 50-mile ride this weekend in Lexington for brain tumor research.

The Pan-Mass ride will start Saturday morning, August 4, in Sturbridge and end for the day, 100 miles later, on the Mass Maritime Academy campus. The participants will then bike the remaining 92 miles on Sunday. Clark said all he has to bring is lots of water, and "maybe a bit of extra clothes."

He said he has so far raised $3,000 and hopes to raise $6,000 by the time the ride starts.

Even though he hasn't been affected directly by cancer, he sees the Pan-Mass Challenge as a way help others who have.

"I just see it so much around me that I feel it's a good thing to do."

Interested donors can reach Clark at 781-383-0393. The Pan-Mass Challenge is from August 4 to 5.

Crackdown on seatbelt violations

Every day, tens of thousands of drivers break the law in Massachusetts — and by doing so — put themselves and their child passengers at deadly risk. In the split second that an adult fails to buckle up or buckle up kids, a decision has been made that could result in the death of one or all passengers in the vehicle.

That is why the Cohasset Police Department is joining the largest-ever crackdown on drivers who don't buckle up and don't buckle up children. From May 21 through Memorial Day, our officers will sharply intensify enforcement of adult seatbelt and child passenger laws throughout the state as part of the Operation ABC Mobilization.

During this enforcement blitz, the Cohasset Police department will increase patrols to look for and ticket drivers in Hingham who knowingly violate seat belt laws. There will be no warnings. No excuses.

We join this enforcement effort because it works. Since the Mobilizations began in 1997, child fatalities have dropped 17 percent. We are proud to be a part of this lifesaving effort, but more must be done.

During 1999, 5 children and 173 adults in Massachusetts died unrestrained in crashes. And traffic crashes continue to be the No. 1 killer of kids, killing more than 2,000 each year. If you ignore the law and put innocent lives at risk, look for us in your rearview mirror this Memorial Day holiday.

Remember, seatbelts save lives. Please buckle-up.

— Police Chief Brian Noonan

The high cost of not buckling up

The following information was provided by the coalition, Seatbelts Are For Everyone.

MEDICAL SERVICES

- In Massachusetts, the average hospital charge for an unbelted patient is $7,000 compared to $1,000 for a belted patient (Harvard School of Public Health).
- Care for each car crash-injured individual with severe brain injury costs Massachusetts more than $100,000 a year. (SHIP)
- A 15-percent increase in seat belt use, like that experienced by others states after they have passed a primary enforcement seatbelt law, would prevent 3,000-4,000 injuries and save Massachusetts an estimated $80 million in healthcare, taxes and insurance costs. (NHTSA)

MONETARY COSTS

- Each driver who buckles up is paying an additional auto insurance premium to cover the costs of the drivers who don't buckle up.
- In 1999, Massachusetts car owners had to cover the bill for an estimated 149,696 injury claims — an estimated loss of $910,486,396 (Auto Insurance Bureau).

COSTS

- Higher taxes to fund emergency and other medical services.
- Increased health insurance costs.
- Higher worker compensation costs.
- Lost work time and productivity.
- In fact, motor vehicle crash injuries on and off the job cost U.S. employers almost $55 billion in 1999.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Village plans

TO THE EDITOR:

To the Board of Selectman:

Although Cohasset Revitalization Corporation (CRC) and by extension, the Village Revitalization Task Force (VRTF),under the banner called Village Infrastructure Improvement Program (VIIP), has withdrawn its "support for the one-way circulation trial period in the village center", please do not assume the "village improvements" that CRC advances will likewise be withdrawn. And do not assume either that the one-way concept is no longer on the table.

From a letter in the Mariner (Aug. 17, 2000) written by a village center merchant, Bob Martin, it appears that the CRC's compulsion for "village improvements" stems from the obvious need to repair the sidewalks downtown. How it grew to encompass not only the center of town, but Elm St., Brook St., South Main St., the harbor (or better known as the Harbor Infrastructure Improvement Program (HIIP), is anyone's guess. The old give-an-inch, take-a-mile syndrome, or is it the tale of the camel in the tent.

This one-way proposal was given the green light based somewhat on a selectman who "walked around" downtown and a survey by the CRC director with a manual counter in his hand overseeing the morning traffic on five days in April. This approach just might lack validity.

We were told that Town Meeting would have the final say. But instead we see the town officials, whether it is the VRTF or the Selectmen, accepting, way more than that, rubber-stamping, CRC's VIIP designs. While the initiative doesn't appear to be resting with our town officials; neither should it repose with CRC. Have the town officials considered that just because they have not heard much from the populace in opposition to CRC's proposals, it doesn't mean the citizenry is in favor of these proposals. It is just as likely, the community can not believe such recommendations are being put forth or that they are being/should even be considered. The town doesn't need one-way streets, creation of a sidewalk along the Red Lion side of James Lane, medium island/strip along the center of Elm St., newly designed park/island at the Kimballs Motel, streetscapes, peninsulas with trees and benches on Elm St. or South Main St., uneven, balance-threatening bricks, cobblestones, or pavers.

What the town would no doubt rather see is good schools, library, recreational facilities, community center, streetlights turned back on, support for our firemen and policemen, detection camera-only to name a few areas that should be funded, if we as a town have money to burn on streetscapes and the like.

As Bob Martin succinctly stated in his letter: KISS, aka "Keep it simple, stupid."

Diversity Day

TO THE EDITOR:

My family lived in Cohasset for the year during 1996-97 before moving to Concord, N.H. We return often to visit family and friends. [It was] our good luck to participate in the Cohasset Diversity Day, April 29 at St. Anthony's Parish. My 8 and 6-year olds adored the storytelling hour with talented Derek Burrows who shared the importance of truly listening to people's stories and to hear about life's differences. I learned so much from the diversity speaker, Carol Copeland Thomas who challenged each adult to move beyond what is familiar and comfortable to broaden your experience and enrich your life.

I understand the event was part of the ADL's "No Place for Hate" to which Cohasset has pledged its commitment as a whole community. How wonderful to see the First Parish Unitarian, Congregation Sha'ary Shalom, Second Congregational, St. Stephen's, The Vedanta Center, the Cohasset Police Department, the Cohasset Parent School Organization, METCO and the Cohasset selectmen join in support of this community event. Shaw's Supermarket and Blue Cross Blue Shield provided much recognized and appreciated corporate support. My family thanks the diversity committee for providing a thoughtful and provocative community event.

Although we appreciate many aspects of living in New Hampshire, we know our community would benefit from such events. Consider this: New Hampshire only recently voted a state holiday to commemorate Martin Luther King, Jr. Day. At Cohasset's Diversity Day, your second graders read school-initiated poems called Dreams on [King's] "I Have a Dream" [speech]. A high school junior movingly recited her poem, "Slaves." You must feel proud to hear these messages from the mouths of your babes.

'Real' cost of runway battle

TO THE EDITOR:

Let me see if I got this correct. A former state senator to lead runway fight? A 300 million-dollar Massport project and he's going to brawl-it-out with, among others, a $35,000 donation from The Town of Hingham [and matching amounts from Hull and Cohasset]? I don't think so!

Let us not forget last years, $100.000 turned $1 million — Cost of the Greenbush Battle! Extrapolating yesterday's spending, that means The Honorable Board of Selectman can spend $300,000 on this year's newest town funded, intergovernmental fight. That's the normal, standard and precedent-set, ten times what they were allocated, budget-interpretation.

The issue is not the outcome, that will eventually come to pass, but how much will this most recent mêlée cost? Will our honorable elected officials adhere to our legislative body's, Town Meeting, allocation? Year after year The Honorable Board of Selectman seem to get involved in conflicts that cost a lot of money. Some may suggest esoteric at best.

Maybe we should vote in a new town department? It could not be called The Police Department it already exists. Not, the Sewer Department — got one. We can call it The Defense Department!

The Honorable Board of Selectman's DOD or better yet HDOD could then issue full and complete annual reports. The HDOD could then have meetings in town facilities, could have open and funded budget discussions; we could even vote a small tax on all town households to allow the HDOD to wage combat on whomever, whenever or whatever they choose.

Next up: Why this is all happening.

COHASSET CARES

Pay-As-You-Throw simplified

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Here's an attempt to present what we need to know about PAYT in short form. Expect a mailing about PAYT soon.

1. The bags, sold in packs of 10 [30-gal. size $1, 15-gal. size 50 cents, buy some of each, see #7 below], in school colors, blue background with TOWN OF COHASSET in white, should be available starting June 4 at: Town Hall June 4-30 only, while we pick up our $50 all-facilities sticker [additional second sticker for $20.]. Thereafter at: DPW, RTF, Cohasset Food Mart, Cohasset Hardware, Fiori Exxon and Joseph's Hardware.

2. Every item of trash thrown away represents a direct cost to all of us residents [presently $97/ton].

3. Our new $50 all-facilities sticker plus the cost of each bag will be paying for half of our trash, the other half coming from our property tax.

4. The more trash we throw out, the more we pay.

Bags will be for sale at: DPW, RTF, Cohasset Food Mart, Cohasset Hardware, Fiori Exxon and Joseph's Hardware.

5. It will pay to recycle and to buy less packaging material.

6. Those of us who do so will no longer be subsidizing the non-recyclers, who then will be paying more.

7 Only TOWN OF COHASSET bags — and large items that don't fit in bags with a 50-cent bag attached to them — will be allowed in the trash bin at the RTF. Household garbage goes in either official bag or small plastic bread bag.

8. All other non-recyclables will be put in the construction/demolition bin for a separate charge.

9. Newspapers loose, please, not bagged.

10. Brown bags in with cardboard.

11.Waxed cartons [i.e., milk, OJ] flattened and in with junkmail.

12.Tin cans flattened.

Thank you very much! It will work out! See you next time.

A cable night with assessors

ASSESSMENTS

ELSA MILLER

The Cohasset Board of Assessors will hold an Open Forum on Thursday May 17 at 7 p.m. at the Selectmen's office in Town Hall. The program will be televised live on Cable-TV channel 10. From 7-9 p.m., citizens can view the "Sales Map" which indicates the location and price range of the sales that will be utilized in the current revaluation. Other sales data information will also be available. The assessors will discuss the revaluation process and answer questions. The public will also be able to call in questions. The phone number will be advertised during the program.

The assessors will discuss the revaluation process and answer questions.

As we all know, the last few years have been quite brisk economically. Properties have appreciated at a remarkable pace. The Boston Globe recently indicated that Cohasset's median price range was $350,000 to $449,999 for the year 2000. This is a substantial increase. Massachusetts Department of Revenue mandates that the assessments be within 10 percent of a 100 percent of "full and fair cash value." The State does regular reviews of the analysis that will indicate the new assessments. They will not certify a tax rate unless we meet the criteria.

We hope to see you or hear from you with your questions. We will also try to give an overview of State Exemptions available for property tax assistance. So, tuned tonight at 7p.m. and get your questions answered.

Elsa Miller is Chairman of the Board of Assessors.

Search for Osgood principal continues

SCHOOL TALK

JANE PESCATORE

The Superintendent's Communication Forum met on Tuesday, May 8. The group covered a number of important topics, and I wanted to share them with you.

A question came from one of the members regarding whether we publicize Superintendent Ted Malvey's email address so that people could contact him directly. Unfortunately, because of potential legal liabilities, Ted is prohibited from using this as a means of communication with the public at large. Instead, he suggested that anyone who would like to speak to him, just pick up the phone.

Ted gave us a run down of all the current job openings in the school system. Some teaching spots have been filled. Some others are proving harder to fill because of the caliber of people the district seeks. The opening for the principal at Osgood is not attracting as many qualified applicants as Ted had hoped. He is therefore advertising again for this position. He noted that this isn't a surprise because there are fewer and fewer people willing to step into administrative positions. When he gets candidates that he thinks should go forward, there will be a screening committee consisting of two school committee members, two parents, two administrators, and two teachers. If any parents are interested in serving on this committee, please contact School Committee Chairman Stephanie Noble.

We then covered the status of the construction projects at the Middle/High School as well as Deer Hill. Contracts have been awarded for both projects, and preliminary site preparations are getting under way. The contractor for the Middle/High School project has decided that he can wait until after school is out to start demolition. This produced a sigh of relief at the High School complex as you can well imagine! The biggest project to begin in the summer at both schools is asbestos removal. Because of the nature of this effort, constant monitoring will occur, and no such work will be done while students are in attendance.

This isn't a surprise because there are fewer and fewer people willing to step into administrative positions.

Because of space constraints, two of the Collaborative classrooms at Osgood must find new homes during the period of construction at Deer Hill. The mini-school, which is also housed at Osgood, will be able to stay there. Ted is working with the director of the collaborative to find space for the displaced classes.

As part of the kickoff for the construction projects, Ted is suggesting "groundbreaking" ceremonies at both schools. These will be held so that the students at each school can participate. The initial thought for the Middle/High School is to have the groundbreaking as part of the 50th anniversary celebration, which starts on May 25th. As plans are firmed up for these events, you'll receive more information.

Nancy Herlin, who is school council representative at Deer Hill, suggested that the schools somehow incorporate the entire design/construction process into a learning experience for students. Needless to say, we all felt this was a great idea, and Ted is going to pursue implementation with the administrators at each school.

Ken Cisneros, school dept. technology director, is going to create a web site for the construction projects that can be accessed by all interested citizens. While he can get the site up and running, the maintenance of it needs to be undertaken by another person. He is still looking for that person; it could be a student or a teacher or even an interested person outside the schools. This will be a great informational resource for everyone.

As you can tell, it's a very busy and a very exciting time at the schools. I encourage everyone to stay in touch via the PSO, the School Councils and the members of this forum. Communication is always the key to success; it is even more important with so many different efforts being undertaken at once.

Jane Pescatore is president of the Cohasset PSO.

HEALTH NOTES

Threats to health in the home environment

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Fourth in a series

The first article of this series was a litany of "sky-is-falling" pronouncements about toxic substances. This article seeks to provide a semblance of balance to the issue.

A recent news release reported that a town was going to outlaw the use of playground equipment using wood treated with arsenic as a preservative. At the same time, a four-year-old fell from a swing set which contained no pressure treated material and consequently rotted in several places. Apple orchards typically contain enormous amounts of arsenic, because lead arsenate has been the preferred treatment for apple worms in this country for 200 years.

Warfarin is rat poison. Many brands exist; Decon is one brand. Another brand name for Warfarin is Coumadin® which is a prescription drug (blood thinner) for heart patients. The same dose which helps a heart patient might be lethal for a rat. There is only one simple answer to the problems of toxic substances in modern society, and that is education and information.

Increasingly the number and variety of chemicals found in the home can pose a risk to its inhabitants. The reasons for this are many, but primarily, the human immune system finds it increasingly difficult to stimulate an appropriate reaction in the body to the various chemicals ingested, either from breathing, ingestion or contact with eyes. or (as in the case of babies and lead paint) contact with eyes or mouth. Many household chemicals are considered pesticides. And pesticides are everywhere; for example, Clorox is considered a pesticide, as is bottom paint for boats.

Fortunately, Massachusetts has an active program of information and education about common pesticides which, because of their ubiquitous nature, represent a threat to high-density populations such as found in New England. The state divides pesticides into two major classes; those which require a notification process for anyone likely to enter a site where pesticides are to be applied, and those for which no notification procedures are required. (The law mandates stiff penalties for application of pesticides without following notification and reporting procedures.) Notification of use is not required if the pesticide consists of ready-to-use dusts, powders, liquids or gel formulations when used as directed by the manufacturer in tamper-resistant bait stations placed in areas inaccessible to children, and termiticides under certain conditions.

The simple answer to the problems of toxic substances in modern society is education and information.

If you are uncertain about the use or toxicity of a substance you wish to use as a pesticide; call the Massachusetts Department of Food and Agriculture (DFA) 617 727-3000 or the EPA 617 565-3932. Both of these agencies have excellent pamphlets and other guidance about the use and dangers of pesticides. Other Chemicals Household chemicals take many forms and serve a host of useful purposes. Nevertheless, one should take care since many have damaging side effects.

Here are a few tips:

- As a rule, never mix different cleaning agents. There are cases where chlorine containing chemicals were mixed with toilet cleaners, resulting in the creation of a cloud of highly toxic gases similar to phosgene (WW1 poison gas) with lethal results. Even household bleach and ammonia combine to give off a toxic gas. Bleach is classed as a pesticide by the Mass Department of Food and Agriculture.
- Ventilate at least once a week allow for a change of air in those rooms for which regular ventilation is limited such as closed bedrooms; rooms with peculiar smells. Allow air changes in closed rooms such as bedrooms or where odors persist. In New England where houses are built tight to conserve fuel, gases such as radon from granite can be trapped inside. New home furnishings and rugs frequently out-gas for months after installation, sometimes emitting dangerous substances such as vinyl chloride.
- Recycle for safety and health. Get rid of harmful materials in the house. Make use of the toxic chemical household hazardous waste collection days drives put on by the DPW at the Recycling Transfer Station (RTF) and in nearby towns. Take used oil to the RTF for disposal. Mercury is an emerging threat and promises to become the major environmental problem of the next decade. We'll talk about the special problems of mercury in another article.
- And above all: Read and follow the instructions on the label. It's a complex and dangerous world out there, and it's necessary to keep yourself informed.

The mighty have fallen

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

How the mighty have fallen — to coin a phrase.

When I was young, and ice covered most of the earth, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the sainted FBI, the vaunted G-Men, stood valiantly between us and the hordes of bank robbers, highwaymen and other miscreants who threatened life, liberty and our American way of life.

We were thrilled when a G-Man named Melvin Purvis and his agents gunned down the bank robber John Dillinger in a Chicago alley, so thrilled that we didn't notice that Purvis was soon rusticated because he was drawing more attention from the newspapers and radio (no television then) than his boss, J. Edgar Hoover.

We were positively ecstatic when J. Edgar himself went to New Orleans to personally slap the cuffs on Alvin "Creepy" Karpis, the last of the big time gangsters of the 30s. What we didn't know was that he did it to impress the Senate Appropriations Committee and get more money for his FBI.

Vaunted G-Men, stood valiantly between us and the hordes of bank robbers.

We sat up late to listen to "Gangbusters" and "The FBI in Peace and War" on the radio (there was no TV, remember?) and heard the valiant and incorruptible agents of the FBI shoot it out with the bad men and round the live ones up by the dozens so they could get a fair trial and be sent away where they couldn't harm us.

For me, personally, the height of FBI worship came in December, 1956, in the Federal Courthouse in Boston when they were choosing a jury to try the Brink's robbers. One prospective juror was asked if he had formed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the accused robbers.

"Yes, I have," he said. "I think they're guilty."

"Why do you say that?" he was asked.

"The FBI wouldn't have arrested them if they weren't," he replied.

How the mighty have fallen — or have I already coined that phrase?

Last week, Sen. Chuck Grassley of Iowa, a senior member of the Senate Judiciary Committee — and a Republican, no less — was calling for an investigation and radical reform of the once-sacrosanct FBI in the wake of a series of mistakes.

In rapid succession, agents were found snuggling up to gangsters in Boston, sending an innocent man (Joe Salvati) to jail for 30 years, wrongly identifying Richard Jewell as the man who placed the bomb at the Atlanta Olympics, spying for the Russians, and failing to produce 3,135 documents for the defense in the trial of Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh.

"We must change the FBI culture that has caused these colossal mistakes," said Grassley, whose committee will have considerable say in who succeeds the retiring Louis Freeh as the next FBI director. "I want to know that the next FBI director is committed to sweeping changes."

If a Republican senator from Iowa had said that about the FBI a half century ago, he couldn't have been reelected dogcatcher in Des Moines.

Or Boston, Massachusetts, either.

POLITICAL NOTES

Bradley speaks on home health care

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) delivered his maiden speech during the recent House budget debate to advocate on behalf of home health care for seniors. Bradley spoke in favor of a budget amendment which proposed earmarking $10 million in the Medicaid long-term care line item for expansion of home health care services. This amendment would help fund a new concept known as "Equal Choice", which allows seniors to choose between institutional care and home care.

"Passage of this amendment says to seniors that Medicaid will spend as much to keep you at home as it would to keep you in a nursing home," Bradley said. "In Massachusetts, 80 percent of all Medicaid long-term care spending is directed towards institutional care, rather than home care. We must start to reverse this."

The legislature referred the matter to a study to determine its feasibility. "It is my belief that allowing "Equal Choice" for seniors is what we need in Massachusetts. We have the eleventh largest senior population in the country, as they age we must provide them, and their families, with choices."

Two new faculty members join Deer Hill staff

TEACHERS WITH CLASS

ELLEN OWENS-RIGBY

The Deer Hill School welcomes new faculty members to its community this year, Karin Taylor and Michael Weydt. Both experienced teachers, who were looking for a new challenge and wanted to benefit the Cohasset community, chose Deer Hill School.

Ms. Taylor joined Deer Hill's fifth-grade team as a special needs teacher. After earning her B.A. in elementary and special education from Providence College, she spent the last five years as a kindergarten and first-grade special needs teacher in Abington. In addition to learning and teaching new curriculum, Ms. Taylor is completing the last of her courses for her master's degree in special education from the University of Massachusetts at Boston. She stated that she is happy to bring her teaching experience to Cohasset's schools and looks forward to the challenges her new role brings.

Mr. Weydt is a familiar figure in Cohasset since he taught physical education at the Osgood School for the last 12 years. He noted that he misses his friends on the Osgood staff and working with younger children, but was ready to try something new in his professional life. At Deer Hill School, Mr. Weydt is working with older children who have more highly-developed gross motor skills, so he is able to teach more complex movement skills and concepts. In addition, he will enjoy the distinction of working with the current fourth grade class for all seven of their elementary physical education years, giving him an unusual but exciting perspective on the growth and development of children over these years of their lives. In the area of personal challenges, Mr. Weydt accomplished a major goal when he ran in the Ocean State Marathon last November. Although he was disappointed with his course completion time of four hours, 47 minutes, it reminded him that sometimes people have no control over things that happen—especially leg cramps.

Both Ms. Taylor and Mr. Weydt look forward to the challenges and opportunities they will have in their new teaching positions. The Deer Hill School community will benefit from these teachers' experience and commitment to teaching and learning.

Music Circus reaches half century mark

REFLECTIONS

ROGER LEONARD

Anyone familiar with Cohasset town history knows of Hanlon Studio's and their beginnings of musical comedy and set design. An outgrowth from all that was a theatrical organization calling themselves the South Shore Players. They staged performances at the Cohasset Town Hall during the Depression Years and beyond. Later, this emerged as the South Shore Music Circus in 1951. The massive tent placed on open land space at Sohier Street was home of where the Cohasset Horse Shows once performed. The wooded area surrounding the canvas structure made a perfect rural setting.

The personnel for summer stock in its truest sense consisted of theatrical students, lesser-known names from motion pictures and Off-Broadway, plus young hopefuls from apprentice programs. As always, in communities across the nation, old barns, some with additions, or theatre-in-the-round circus tent configurations was the physical aspect against a verdant, small town background. The creation of a logical and, a sometimes believable setting for a particular performance could be a challenge, despite some poor production values.

Fifty years ago, the world was different. The extent of changes being fewer human beings inhabiting this planet and consuming a lesser amount of resources. Bear in mind World War II had ended. Our fighting men were home for good. America was filled with hope and promise.

In those days there were no special parking privileges for the disabled and no wheelchair accessible ramps mandated by the federal government. Also, no children's theatre workshops, no speed bumps, and no liquor licenses. The lack of frills and precautionary measures seem light-years ago in comparison with the social services we all expect today. Each show stayed one week. The performances were limited to musicals and operettas.

The concept of rock n' roll revivals and Las Vegas style headliners such as Steve & Edie, Wayne Newton, or Englebert Humperdinck simply didn't exist. Operetta's and musicals from the teams of Rodgers & Hart, Rodgers & Hammerstein, Gilbert & Sullivan, Lerner & Lowe, and those of Sigmund Romberg, Franz Lahar, Rudolph Friml, Jerome Kern, and Victor Herbert became the popular trends in summer theatre for those times.

Here is a "roll call" of once popular works, some not necessarily performed at the Music Circus, but are attributed to the grand composers previously mentioned:

"May Time," "Rosalinda," "Northwest Outpost," "Bloomer Girl," "The Firefly," "Naughty Marietta," "Rose Marie," "Blossom Time," "The Vagabond King," "Desert Song," "The Mikado," "Floradora Girl," "Merry Widow," "Kismet Kiss Me Kate," "Sweethearts," "Showboat," "Girl of the Golden West," "The Red Mill," "Student Prince," "Love Me Tonight," "New Moon," "Rosalie," "H.M.S. Pinafore."

Bear in mind World War II had ended. Our fighting men were home for good. America was filled with hope and promise.

A preferred seating ticket could be purchased for a "couple o' bucks". The director type chairs had that familiar wide and stretched piece of cloth material for back support. To those unable to afford this, the rear of the circus tent offered wooden folding chairs for a lesser sum of money. The floor plan was a graduated and circular combination of wooden levels and steps for the stability of the seating compartments layered in soft gravel as a foot support. It is not unreasonable to assume that a lady oblivious to others could slip off her footwear and dangle her feet, swirl her toes or press her heels into the soft cool substance while enjoying the performance on stage. Of course, these chairs were not permanent placements, but had to be stored away after each season.

Understudies and members of the chorus arrived here in June, mostly by train or bus. Few owned automobiles. For the theatrical types, their comings and goings became a revolving door activity of financial attachment with the ever-changing plays at the South Shore Music Circus. One might say they became our counter culture during the long hot days of summer. The young women wore capri pants, halter tops and other more revealing articles of apparel. It should be remembered as a time in fashion when ladies wore either skirts or dresses in public. Some smoked. Others applied exotic eye make-up. Peroxide blondes became those who were perceived with a high degree of visibility. They seemed to draw attention to themselves. All of this was curious behavior for the onlooker in those days, and it obviously set theatrical people apart from the conservative Cohasset citizenry of the 1950's. They could be observed as steady customers in popular dining places at The Cove. The many eating establishments included Grassie's Market, The SeaHorse, Hugo's-Kimball's, Hugo's Lighthouse and in later years, The Shack. What transportation difficulties existed in a small town? The answer to that question was "none". Those employed at the Music Circus could rent "English Bikes". The Jenny Filling Station at Depot Court displayed a collection of different Raleigh models. Among them was a bicycle-built-for-two. Rentals were priced at about $1.50 per week.

Many roomed in private homes throughout the town. Mary Finch, an elderly Norfolk Road resident, was remembered as one who rented out available space to Music Circus performers. It was unthinkable in those times to accommodate one's living arrangement in far away Boston and then commute to Cohasset. Rehearsal tryouts occurred not in some fancy convention hall in the city, but from bare and simple surroundings of McElwain Hall at our own community center. With windows opened, the rustle of costumes, the commotion of dancing feet, and joyous singing could be heard throughout the village.

The past record of events in the existence of a building or, in this case, a circus tent probably reveals at least one misfortune. A storm of cyclonic proportions was sweeping up the coast, but following the normal course of going out to sea. Its path took an unexpected northerly twist for Long Island, and ravaged the southern New England coastline. During the Labor Day weekend of 1954, hurricane Carol left 68 mortalities in its wake of death and destruction. With the season drawing to its conclusion, management at the Music Circus decided to collapse the tent, lest it be torn to shreds. This smart judgment spared any weaknesses in the structural integrity of the entire support beam system.

My parents attended many, many performances in those early years. They held season tickets. Mother kept a stack of old playbills in her bedroom closet, long after the association discontinued booking that type of entertainment. Where are those booklets today? One just can't hold onto everything.

Massport's qualifications are questioned

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

Logan Airport is badly managed. I learned it at the Public Hearing for Logan expansion, listening to a varied chorus from 30 towns. The chorus is in my mind while I write comments for the Public Comment Period* against Massport's Environmental Impact Statement (EIS):

If Logan's delay record is as catastrophic as Massport says, their management has made it so.

Massport is not qualified to manage a project with gigantic negative impacts on public health. Massport apparently cannot find the South Shore on a map. It proposes to bring the noise and emissions more deeply into the residential bowl around the Massachusetts Bay and put three to four times more pollution onto neighborhoods. Massport falsely claims environmental benefits from75,000 new flights "out over the water", which appear on their EIS maps at low altitudes over South Shore homes. Without any pollution and public health studies at all for the South Shore, Massport is spinning a residential pollution gain as an environmental gain!

If Logan's delay record is as catastrophic as Massport says, their management has made it so. They say they are powerless, because the airlines are allowed to schedule as many flights as they want. If you follow this logic out, the added capacity claimed for proposed runway 14/32 will again be overrun, and more airport expansion must follow, in a permanent and uncontrollable spiral. The size of Logan's impact must be scaled to the urban location of the airport. If Greater Boston is not a permanent helpless sacrifice to the appetite of the airlines — and it is possible to control the haphazard growth of Logan at some point — then it is possible to control it now. (E.g., air freight flights all night over residential neighborhoods are haphazard management, at best.)

Massport Director Virginia Buckingham was previously a press secretary, a spinmeister. Apparently, Massport is satisfied those are qualifications to run an airport. Buckingham has certainly been quick to cover every hazard to the 14/32 juggernaut with spin control. If the runway were built, spin could not fix its damage to public health and the civic fabric. The experts on those impacts are the communities already affected and their elected officials. It is shamefully bad management to repel their first-hand, site-specific, time-tested knowledge instead of learning from it. And the knowledge of aviation and health experts not on the Massport payroll, who are free to look at emerging data on the downsides of aviation sprawl. Deciding if major polluter Logan should pollute more, weighing the expansion Massport craves against public health costs, managing noise so life on the ground is still good – these require experts Massport did not hire. The process badly needs the residential victims of Logan to tip the balance toward a livable world class region, or just a livable one, if we can't have both.

Town to mark 50th anniversary of middle/high school

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Like most 50-year-olds, Cohasset Middle/High School is starting to suffer from decades of wear and tear. But unlike most 50-year-olds, the building will soon undergo a major renovation and expansion that will result in a practically brand-new structure.

Before it goes under the sledgehammer, the middle/high school will get its own 50th birthday party on Memorial Day weekend, with a celebration that will feature alumni guest speakers, photo displays, tours of the building and the groundbreaking ceremony for the renovation project.

The idea for a celebration was the brain-child of middle/high school principal Dr. Michael Jones.

"I saw the cornerstone of the building and it said 1950, and amid all the talk about the renovations, the building is now 50 years old," he said. "I think its important for a school to have a sense of tradition. Values are derived from tradition."

Over the next two years, the middle/high school will essentially be gutted and rebuilt, with a new athletic complex in the back, and new science and technology labs. The face-lift is part of a $41 million school renovation project, that will also see similar changes made to the 47-year old Deer Hill School.

Jones said he mentioned the idea of "celebrating the changeover" to some people and soon a committee was formed and the idea was off and running.

"Once the committee got together, we realized we had more of an opportunity than just a celebration," said committee chairman Jeanne (Stoughton) Quigley, Class of 1972. "We don't have archives, we don't have memorabilia. We want to develop an ongoing archive that would remain at the school to preserve for future classes."

"I think its important for a school to have a sense of tradition. Values are derived from tradition."

— Dr. Michael Jones, DMHS principal

Not only will the celebration be a remembrance of the building's past 50 years, but also the formal kickoff of a Cohasset High School alumni association.

"Having this committee and having that come out of that has been really exciting," she said.

Quigley said she tagged along to the first meeting with a friend and ended up chairing the whole committee. She said fellow committee members Joan Busk, Marilyn Morrison, Pat Martin, Karen Oronte, Ira and Peg Stoughton, Helen Pratt and Merle Brown have helped tremendously and volunteered many hours to the effort.

Festivities kick off Friday, May 25 with an all-school assembly in the Sullivan Gymnasium, where alumni will give talks about their experiences in and after Cohasset High School. Scheduled to speak are Dr. David Keefe, Nina Steele Welford, Matt Trask, and Jerry White. Jim Lagrotteria, class president of the first graduating class from the new high school in 1952, will introduce the speakers.

Afterwards, students and faculty will file outside for the renovation project's groundbreaking ceremony, followed by a cook-out.

On Saturday, May 26, from 1-5 p.m., the Sullivan Gymnasium will host a large photo gallery of students, athletics and activities at the middle/high school over the past 50 years.

"We're sending out invitations to old retired teachers and administration and staff," said Quigley. "It'll be a chance for old friends to visit."

She said celebrants will be able to take a guided tour of the current building and "walk down memory lane before things change."

The exhibit will also feature old radio and video broadcasts of football games, the 1950 cornerstone, plans for the renovation project and the presentation of citations by state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley.

A DJ will spin a collection of music from the five decades. Alumnae Lily (Carbone) Sestito will also sing.

"Our hope is that we get a huge response for the alumni association, so we can keep our archives and be able to keep a connection with the school, and hopefully make a big enough contribution in some way," said Quigley.

She said the committee has a list of alumni who have recently attended reunions, but still need help getting the word out.

Quigley said credit should be given to Dr. Jones who proposed the idea.

"Without his foresight, we would've missed this opportunity."

high school — located where the town police and fire station is now.

Lagrotteria said the old high school didn't have a library, and its shop was a separate 15-foot by 15-foot building next door. Science students had to share Bunsen burners in the laboratory. "You were lucky if you got to use a burner once a week," he said.

But in 1951, his senior year, Lagrotteria and the rest of the 240-student high school moved out of their wooden schoolhouse and its condemned third floor, and into the new state-of-the-art high school on Pond Street. The new high school not only had a library, but lockers, a shop, gymnasium and cafeteria.

"We went from a little, tiny home-style kitchen in the basement to a luxury cafeteria," he recalled. "There were just so many differences. It was like going from a little red school house to a megaplex. There was just absolutely no comparison."

The old Osgood School – not to be confused for the new Osgood School or the former Osgood School (on Ripley Road), which took the moniker after the building of the current high school – seemed to be a problem from the start.

Town historian David Wadsworth, who's grandfather, Edward Nichols, designed the building, said it was constructed over budget and behind schedule in 1891. He said in the mid-1940's, the state fire marshal condemned the third-floor auditorium and gymnasium as a fire hazard.

Selectman Merle Brown said the town began discussing a new high school in the 1920's, but took until 1949 until it was passed.

"It's Cohasset, it takes a long time to do anything," Brown said of the delay.

The town settled on the town poor farm, where families who couldn't afford houses during the Depression could live and work, as the new site for the school. Town Meeting authorized $921,000 for the project, and fortunately was able to contract Volpe Construction to do the work for $585,978.

The cornerstone was laid in 1950, and the school opened its doors in September of 1951. Unfortunately for Brown, he had graduated the previous June.

"I remember riding my bike over there and seeing what was going on," he said. "It was something this town hadn't seen before."

Brown said the town loved the new 50's style design of schools. "It was very well accepted," he said.

The new building looks much the same now as it did then, except with the additions of the Sullivan Gymnasium, the middle school wing and back wing of classrooms.

"It was like going from a 1930's automobile to a 2001 Cadillac."

— Jim Lagrotteria, president of the CHS Class of 1952

The school committee said in the 1952 Town Report, "The school has proven to be everything that we had anticipated. Its affect on students and teachers alike has been noticeable. Better lighting, proper ventilation in the classrooms and modern athletic facilities make both teaching and learning a pleasure."

Lagrotteria, who served as the senior class president for the first graduating class out of the new high school, said students were enthralled with the new building.

"Nobody skipped school," he said with a laugh. "It was like going from a 1930's automobile to a 2001 Cadillac."

The town is about to upgrade to the 2002 version. For the next two years the middle/high school will be completely renovated and expanded. Over Memorial Day, the town will hold a special celebration to remember the building's first 50 years, and look into its next 50.

On Friday, May 25, Lagrotteria will introduce a number of guest alumni speakers at a school-wide assembly, followed by the $41 million project's ground-breaking ceremony. On Saturday, the Sullivan Gymnasium will be filled with pictures, alumni and retired faculty and staff to relive the building's history. Tours of the current building will be available, as will plans for the new building. The Deer Hill School will also undergo a major renovation and expansion as part of the project.

Fore! Golfers worry about train's effect on their game

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

When it comes negative effects of to the train – most of the issues have focused on the homeowner and traffic.

But what about the golfer?

Officials at the Cohasset Golf Club are worried that the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority is ignoring their concerns that include vibration from passing trains affecting play on the greens of holes 6 and 7 which are about 50 and 70 feet from the rail bed, respectively.

In a letter to Tom Gruber, head of the Cohasset Greenbush Mitigation Committee, and Alexander Macmillan, Hingham's Greenbush coordinator, the president of the golf club pointed out the course abuts the rail line for about 1,950 feet in Hingham and 450 feet in Cohasset, for a total of some 2,400 feet.

"The golf club remains concerned with respect to issues of noise, vibration, increased water flow, tree removals and related impact to adjacent wetlands, fairways and greens," wrote Francis J. Gaul, Jr.

According to Gaul, communication was going well a year ago when MBTA point-man Kevin Dasey and an engineer from the consulting firm Sverdrup met at the golf club to review Greenbush plans. But Dasey, who was popular with towns for his direct approach, left the agency post in February.

Now the golf club seems to be getting the "silent treatment," Gaul said.

"To date, no specific response or follow-up information has been provided," Gaul wrote.

But in telephone interviews both Gruber and Macmillan said the letter was the first they'd heard from the golf club.

Macmillan, who also sits on the Citizens Advisory Committee — a regional group reviewing the Greenbush environmental feasibility study — said he discussed the letter with Sverdrup at the group's last meeting. He thinks the Cohasset club will get the same eight-foot high, black chain-link fencing that the South Shore Country Club in Hingham will.

"But the effect on golf of the train rattling by – I'm not sure what their concerns are," he said.

Gruber, who called the golf club after receiving the letter, said it was the first time he knew of any concerns.

"We've done so much to try and raise awareness," he said. "I was flabbergasted when I got the letter."

Specific club concerns include:

- Additional inflow of water, specially potentially contaminated runoff from the new parking lot that could pass through the Hingham Skating Club pond into Turkey Run Creek and onto the course;
- Excessive vibration and noise affecting play on the greens of holes 6 and 7, and possible damage to the subsoil structure, drainage and irrigation systems of the greens from the vibration. Also, noise levels could affect golfers.
- The club wants assurances that no trees or vegetation on club property would be destroyed;
- Club officials were also advised that a six-foot chain link fence would be installed along the right-of-way that abuts the course.

William E. Beauregard, chairman of the grounds committee of the club, said the effect of the train on the greens and subsoil structure is an unknown. He understood the Cohasset station plans are still in the early design phase, so there may still be an opportunity for input there. Beauregard could not comment on why the club didn't get involved in the Greenbush mitigation process sooner.

a successful method to kill off phragmites in other locations. "We did some research on various methods used on the Internet, and cutting down the phragmites is only the first step. You do have to have some salinity there do prevent regrowth of vegetation," Keefe explained. "Primarily, the means of preventing regrowth is through the reintroduction of tidal water, which we're doing. The application of salt was only an insurance measure."

Jacob's Meadow was originally a salt marsh, with its water level rising and falling along with the tide in Cohasset Harbor. However, when the town originally installed the outfall pipes from the meadow under Elm Street, the new tide gates closed at high tide, and prevented saltwater from flowing back into the marsh. As a result, phragmites took hold as the meadow became a freshwater floodplain.

Unfortunately, the reed causes more problems than anything. As it dies and falls over, it can act as a dam, impeding the flow of water out of the meadow. The reed also ignites easily and can be a fire hazard during heat waves.

When Tutela Engineering replaced the drainage pipes under Elm Street in 1999 as part of the town's ongoing James Brook flood control project, it added a third outfall pipe, and reinstalled the tide gates. However, an Environmental Protection Agency official, in town on a different site visit, noticed the newly-installed tide gates and asked about them. The Army Corps of Engineers subsequently said that the town and Tutela had mistakenly not received Army Corps approval to do the work. Tutela Engineering president, Domenic Tutela, said the state failed to tell him he needed Army Corps approval for the project.

For the past year, Tutela, the town, and the Army Corps have been trying to figure out how to restore the salt marsh through the reintroduction of tidal water, while ensuring the properties surrounding the marsh aren't flooded. Tutela and the town have installed special "neoprene" wedges which allow some water to flow in, and as much water as possible to flow out. But the Army Corps has been pushing for the use of self-regulated tide gates; a system that would allow a certain amount of water into the meadow, and then shut automatically.

Last week, the town was told by the state Wetlands Restoration Program that the grant proposal was both too expensive and not a recommended solution to dealing with phragmites.

"The Massachusetts Wetlands Restoration Program does not practice phragmites control with rock salt, nor do we encourage others to do so," the EOEA said in a letter sent to the town. "It is our goal that our wetland restorations be self-sustaining with little or no maintenance. We have found that, in most cases, restoring tidal flows...will control the growth and eventually kill off phragmites in the marsh."

The EOEA added that if increased tidal flow doesn't kill off the reeds, then the area would require the periodic application of rock salt, and would therefore not qualify as a "self-sustaining wetland restoration."

The EOEA also said the normal cost of a restoration project is $10,000 per acre, considerably less than the $50,000 for 0.8 acres proposed by the town.

Even though the EOEA letter also endorsed the use of self-regulated tide gates, Tutela and Town Manager Mark Haddad both insist that the introduction of any more water into the meadow would result in flooding along the abutting properties.

Late last month Tutela increased the height of water in the meadow from the average 3.3 feet to 3.6 feet. He said one property owner saw water come onto her property.

"For flood water similar to what we had in March [when five inches of rain fell on Cohasset in 12 hours] to come down and flood the meadow on top of the high tide water level would probably increase the height of water in the meadow another foot," he said. "And in this particular area that would be disastrous."

Tutela said for every foot higher water in the meadow gets, it spreads 30 feet horizontally.

"The way the gradient is, 3.6 feet is a dangerous number to be at all the time," he said.

Keefe said raising the water level was a "one-time experiment," that the results are still being evaluated and no decisions have been made as to what the next step will be.

Tutela said one recommendation he is certain of, at this point, is to not recommend the use of self-regulating tide gates.

"The level of saltwater in the meadow will be much higher with the neoprene wedges than prior to the project," he said. "The James Brook work was a flood control project, not a restoration project, not that we're against that. We're going to do everything we can to promote restoration short of putting in that type of tide gate which might jeopardize the entire project."

Haddad said selectmen are waiting for a final recommendation from the Army Corps before making a plotting a course of action.

Train deal inked ating table. One of the biggest holdups over that agreement was proper compensation for the taking of the 27-acre right-of-way. A town assessment of the property put the right-of-way's value between $2 and $2.5 million.

The MBTA originally contended that it didn't have to compensate the town for any land taking, but were willing to give the town $1 million in exchange for a "friendly taking." Outraged residents packed a Jan. 30 meeting and urged selectmen to demand more. Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan said in February the state would pay full market value for the land, but disagreed with the $2 million price tag.

The new deal says the MBTA will reassess the land and then haggle with the town's assessors over the value. If an agreement can not be reached, the MBTA will hire a third assessor to settle the disagreement. However, the state has agreed to pay the town at least $1million for the taking. It also said it will give the town $500,000 for any open space and recreation land purchases to replace the lost land.

"There's basically a $1.5 million floor," said Selectman Thomas Callahan.

However, Ripley Road resident Peter Pratt, one of those that led the fight for more money for the land taking, again argued that the town should go back and seek more in compensation.

Pratt said that state law requires the MBTA to provide equitable replacement for any public land it takes. He urged the board to go back and seek more for the taking.

"You don't have to sign this tonight," he said.

Selectman Sullivan and Selectman Chairman Fred Koed disagreed with Pratt.

Sullivan said the town has done a lot of work to come up with a proper value for right-of-way. "I don't think we'll ever come up with something that will satisfy everybody," he said. "I think it's a reasonable, acceptable decision in the best interest of the community."

Koed said he thinks the town has received the best possible deal it can. "I think if you stopped a reasonable person in the street, that had no background on the discussions, that they would say this is a reasonable price."

He also disagreed with resident's contentions that the right-of-way was a popular piece of open space. "Personally, I don't remember the last time I've walked down the right-of-way," he said. "It's not a destination."

Selectman Thomas Callahan said he walked the right-of-way during his time as conservation commission chairman, and remembered that a lot of it was under water, and also choked with illegal dumping.

Koed feared that any attempt to reopen negotiations would result in Cohasset losing parts of its deal. "Everything is part of a package, and I think we could start losing $500,000 chunks," he said.

The agreement also sets up a binding informal dispute resolution process that private property owners can enter into if they wish to dispute the amount of mitigation allocated to them by the MBTA.

Both Selectman Merle Brown and Selectman Ronnie McMorris considered the deal the best the town could get.

Callahan said he would reluctantly sign the deal. Callahan has been a vocal opponent of the plan to bring diesel-train service back to town, but said he felt obligated to protect the town.

"I have to do what's best for the town, despite my personal feelings," he said. "I think I'd be doing a disservice to the town if I didn't sign this. This is as good of a deal as we're going to get."

Jim Watson of Border Street slammed the deal and urged the board to not sign.

"This project is as much about providing Modern Continental with its next project, as it is providing diesel rail service to the area," he said. Modern Continental has the construction contracts for the Big Dig and Route 3 expansion project.

He compared restoring a diesel rail line to equipping a house with kerosene lamps the day before electricity comes to town.

At the meeting, the deal was supported by former mitigation committee chairman Dean Rizzo and North Main Street resident Sheila Evans. Jacqueline Whipple, also of North Main Street, extended her thanks to the board, as well as that of her husband David, and Beach Street resident Lincoln Bloomfield, neither of whom could make the meeting.

Cohasset is the second Greenbush corridor town to sign an agreement with the MBTA. Hingham has also signed. Weymouth and Scituate are in the midst of negotiations. The Greenbush line is the third leg of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration Project. The restored Plymouth and Middleboro lines were opened in Sept., 1997.

North Cohasset residents to pay 10 percent more for water

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

Water company customers in Hingham, Hull and north Cohasset are in for another increase.

The good news is that Massachusetts-American Water Company's November 2000 request for a 16 percent rate hike was scaled back to 10.5 percent.

The increase went into effect May 1.

The downside is that the average ratepayer with a 5/8-inch meter, who uses 2,400 cubic feet of water per quarter, will pay about $40 more per year for the precious resource. The average family uses 72,000 gallons of water per year.

In April, representatives from Mass-American, officials from Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and Oxford — which is also served by the water company — and the Department of Telecommunications and Energy recommended a settlement which included the new rate hike. The DTE recently approved the recommendation. The increase represents additional annual revenues of $1.2 million for the water company.

"I think we did a good job in limiting the amount of the increase, cutting it by 30 percent, especially since in the past the DTE has been industry-friendly right down the line," said Hingham Town Administrator Charles Cristello.

The rate hike is the first sought by Mass-American in five years, but customers were hit with a 153 percent increase in 1996 to pay for the water company's new $37.7 million water treatment plant which was built in conformance with federal purification standards.

Hingham and Hull challenged the "excessive" rate hike in court, but the state Supreme Judicial Court recently ruled in favor of the water company.

Mass-American spokesperson Keith Bossung notes the amount of the latest increase will vary, depending on the customer, because the new settlement includes conservation measures.

The average residential user will see an increase of about 6.6 percent, while customers with higher consumption will experience about a 13.5 percent hike. The overall average for all customers, including commercial and industrial ratepayers, will be 10.5 percent.

In other words, customers who use more water will no longer pay less per gallon as they have in the past. All users will now pay the same rate, regardless of how much or little water they use.

Bossung called that change the "first step towards conservation" in response to a Department of Environmental Protection administrative order issued two years ago calling for the elimination of the declining rate structure and institution of conservation-based rates.

If that doesn't work, stricter measures could be taken.

"That could mean the eventual implementation of a penalty for customers who use more water beyond a certain threshold," Bossung said. "In other words, they would pay more per gallon once they reach that point. But we want to give the other measure a chance to work first."

Still, time is of the essence, some say. A recent study revealed the Weir River Watershed is overtaxed, which raised a warning flag in town.

More conservation

Cristello thinks the water company should spend more time and energy on issues related to conservation and finding new water sources — sooner rather than later.

"Right now Mass-American is looking to others to solve the problem," he said. "The town needs to be more vigilant, because there's clearly a need for more water in town, even without considering new developments in the future. The need for more water must be approached in the most cost-effective way possible. Water is a difficult resource to replace, and there's a very limited supply of it."

With regard to the recent settlement, Bossung said all those involved in the negotiations worked hard in a joint effort to come up with a "reasonable settlement for both parties."

Mass-American was willing to settle for a lower rate increase in exchange for an effective date three months earlier than originally requested.

Water company officials applied for the 16 percent increase late last year. They said the request is in line with the current inflation rate and is needed to cover operation, capital improvement and other expenses.

"We need to replace the aging infrastructure and utilize new technology in order to maintain a potable, safe and sufficient water supply in the future," said Bossung.

In November, officials and residents from the three towns packed the Town Hall auditorium to express their staunch opposition to the request at a public hearing held by the Department of Telecommunications and Energy. The water company already charges rates that are among the highest in the nation.

In recent months, ratepayers have experienced some relief thanks to a state program calling for an average $100 savings per customer annually through 2008. During 1999, the first year of the program, ratepayers saw an average decrease of $190.

"The towns can't appeal this most recent increase because it's an arbitration-like process," noted Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who was instrumental in helping the state rate relief program become a reality.

The Department of Telecommunications and Energy instituted the settlement intervention process to reduce administrative costs incurred by water companies and their ratepayers in adjudicating rate cases.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Hedlund also participated in the settlement talks.

"This is not a compromise from the towns' perspective. I think they approached the discussions with the realization that the Department of Telecommunications and Energy has seemed to lean towards the filer of rate increase requests in the past and saw this as the best possible deal," Hedlund said. "If they didn't accept it, Hingham, Hull and Cohasset water customers could have ended up with a larger rate increase. It had to do with a sense of reality working within the context of this particular process, which has been unfair in the past."

Since the 1996 rate hike, Hedlund has advocated that the towns of Hingham, Cohasset and Hull look into the possibility of taking the water company by eminent domain.

"There are a lot of citizens with different kinds of expertise in the three communities who could at the very least put together an ad hoc group to perform an investigation of the benefits and drawbacks of doing so," he said. "That would be taking the first small steps in that direction. Ultimately, the final decision would rest with the townsfolk and selectmen, but there may be some benefit in garnering that type of information."

MAWC serves approximately 17,400 customers in Hingham, Hull, Millbury, Oxford, north Cohasset and a portion of Norwell.

Local woman lobbies for tougher seatbelt law

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Inta Hall's eyes give her away. They possess a steely determination that belies her otherwise grandmotherly demeanor.

Hall is, after all, a proud grandmother — but she is first and foremost a mother, one who has a story to tell.

Twenty years ago, she suffered the worst nightmare imaginable. In two separate car crashes over two years, she lost one son and another suffered severe brain injury. Neither boy was wearing a seatbelt, which in each accident could have made all the difference.

So the Hingham resident is on a mission, one she's fought before and will again, if need be.

"I decided a long time ago, I could either sit in a corner and feel sorry for myself the rest of my life or do something," she says.

Seatbelts have been required under state law since 1994. Not buckling up is subject to secondary enforcement, meaning the officer can cite a motorist for not using a seatbelt only if he or she is stopped for something else. The fine for not using a seatbelt is $25. Under existing state law, a police officer can only use primary enforcement to stop a vehicle for a seatbelt infraction if a child, age 12 or under, is not wearing a seatbelt.

Secondary seatbelt enforcement is simply not enough, says Hall, a member of the Brain Injury Association. She is a familiar face on Beacon Hill where she is lobbying for primary seatbelt enforcement — meaning a police officer could pull you over for not buckling up. For secondary enforcement, the traffic stop must be tied to another violation.

Primary enforcement of seatbelt violations is back before the state Legislature. It's passed the Senate and is before the House, where she thinks it stands a fighting chance this year.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who supports the bill, said last year the effort failed by about 14 votes.

"We have 17 new members," he said. "Anytime you bring in a new crop — more than the number it was defeated by — there is hope."

State Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, who has mixed feelings about the proposal, said beefing up the seatbelt law was briefly debated on the Senate floor several weeks ago. "I want to see enhanced seatbelt use," Hedlund said. "We have the safest roads in the country, but yet we have the highest rate of fatality from lack of seatbelt use. However, I'm not too sure about primary enforcement. That means Big Brother becomes a major part of the issue. I think what would help more people buckle up would be enhanced education on it, especially for kids just learning how to drive."

Hall believes the "civil rights" argument against beefing up the seven-year-old law is ludicrous.

"Driving is not a right," she says. "It is a highly regulated activity."

Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan said the public often views any additional law as a violation of their rights.

"But seatbelts save lives, there's no doubt about it," he said. Cohasset police are participating in Operation ABC Mobilization May 21-Memorial Day during which they will intensify seatbelt law enforcement.

The direct and indirect costs — most of which are passed on to all of us through higher insurance rates — for people injured in car crashes are astronomical. Those crashes are more likely to occur to males aged 16-34, Hall says. And many don't think of the cost of the fire department and EMTs "when they pick you up off the road," she says.

One of Hall's sons, who got into the car with a drunk driver and crashed a block from their home, spent months in a coma and 6-1/2 years in rehabilitation. He was just 17. She knows what it's like to hold a bedside vigil. The other son, 21, was killed after being thrown from the car that skidded on an icy patch. He was on his way home from college.

Despite her personal experience, she said chances of your drying in a car crash are slim. She said there are 28,000 brain injuries annually in Massachusetts alone and almost half are due to car crashes with the main cause — lack of wearing a seatbelt.

"It does affect others," she says. "Emotionally and financially, not only families but the whole of society and it is preventable."

There are 17 states and the District of Columbia that have primary seatbelt enforcement.

Hall said statistics show that seatbelt usage shoots up immediately when there is primary enforcement. California adopted the law in 1992 and seatbelt usage there skyrocketed from 20 percent to 90 percent.

"We know it's working," she said about primary enforcement. "We're trying to change people's behavior and changing behavior needs a sanction. Simply telling people is not enough."

Hall fought to get the state to adopt a seatbelt law through the mid '80s and early '90s. She organized the first seatbelt coalition in '84-'85. The first state seatbelt law was passed in '85 and went into effect in 1986, only to be repealed by referendum. Hall and other supporters didn't give up. They continues their effort to educate legislators, businesses and the general public about the importance of seatbelts and seatbelt enforcement.

The seatbelt law passed the Legislature in the early '90s and again, opponents tried to repeal it, but this time they failed.

"Now we're back again," she said.

She said there are about 1600 reasons why you can be stopped by a police officer including having a dirty license plate. It's time for seatbelts to join that list she says.

The freedom or civil rights issue just doesn't stand up, Hall says.

"It's not really a rights or freedom issue," she says. "Because if you're in a wheelchair, you don't have much freedom."

The implausible dream

Cohasset track team takes first league crown in a quarter century

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

To say it's been a special season for the Cohasset boys spring track team doesn't even come close to summing it up.

Indeed, just winning their first league title in 25 years would be special enough.

However, when you throw in the fact that they did it with a roster that was literally 25 percent the size of some of their top competition, it becomes something quite a bit bigger.

"I can't say enough about the hard work and the dedication of these 16 boys," effused head coach Al Lafountain. "Obviously, we have some talented kids, but it was the hard work that set them apart."

With several team members forced to compete in as many as four events in some meets this season, that observation kind of goes without saying.

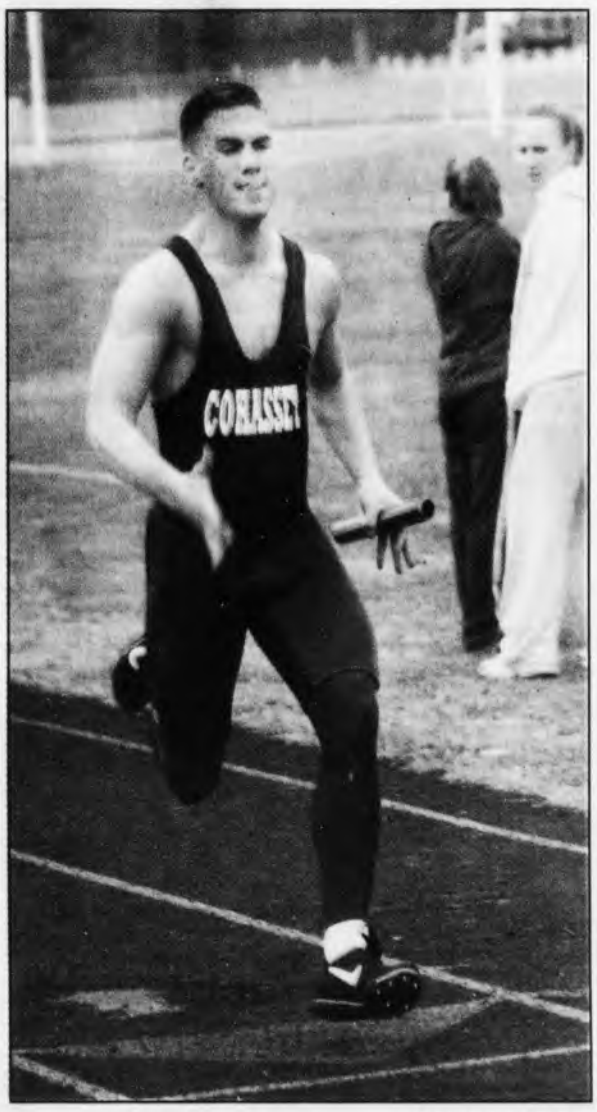
The boys wrapped up their perfect 6-0 season with a 79-58 win on Thursday over Carver, a team that carries three times as many athletes as Cohasset.

As usual, there were several multiple top finishes by Cohasset tracksters, the most notable being dual first-place performances by senior tri-Captain Brian Krupczak (triple jump and 200 meter) and junior Liam Martin (high jump and 300 hurdles).

Top places were also taken by senior Robin Cunningham in the 110 hurdles, junior Jason Brown in the 100, sophomore Ian Kidder in the 400, junior Dan Kinchla in the two-mile, Steve Laney in the discus and junior captain Pete Maitland in javelin.

LaFontain, in his third season as head track coach and fourth year at Cohasset High, credits assistant coach Mark Hall with much of the success his team has had, particularly on the short track.

"The one area I felt a little deficient in as a coach was with the sprinters, but Mark has come in and done a phenomenal job working with kids like Brian (Krupczak) and Jason Brown."



With the regular season done, LaFountain and Hall are now turning their attention to the Class D State Championships on May 26 at Norwell High, where the Cohasset boys finished ninth a year ago.

With most of his top athletes back this season, LaFountain feels the Skippers have a legitimate shot at taking first or second place against the statewide field of smaller schools.

His rationale is that Krupczak, Maitland, Kinchla, Martin and tri-Captain Tim Baird all have a legitimate shot at taking first place in their respective events, and several others have a good chance at placing top three. With 10 points going for first-place finishes and five for second, 50 points is generally enough for teams to compete for the crown.

"Obviously, it would take a little luck, but not that much," the coach asserted. "We have athletes who are capable of pulling this off. If things fall right…."

It's understandable that the coach would have trouble completing this thought. After all, it's difficult to imagine something more special than what's already taken place.

Rude awakening

C.H.S tennis players struggle at state individual tourney

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

Last Saturday, some of the top competitors from both the boys and girls tennis teams for Cohasset got the opportunity to see how they stacked up against some of the rest of the Massachusetts' elite. The result: pretty darn competitive.

Senior captain Chris Golden, who has only one loss on the year as the boys team's second singles player, was the only member from either team to win his or her first match of the day. Golden beat his opponent in two sets, and stayed competitive in the second against one of the seeded tournament players

Sophomore Lindsay Grossman, who has yet to lose a set in team match play as the first singles player for the girls team, received a bye in the first round, in deference to her outstanding record this year. In the second round though, Lindsay's winning streak was snapped by the female ace from Wellesley, a 7-5, 6-1 win for her.

"It was 95 degrees out there," said tenth year coach Sarah Meehan. "The girl knew that if it went three sets that Lindsay was gonna beat her."

Sophomore Julie Shea, who has shown the same type of dominance as Grossman at the number two spot, ended up losing 6-1, 6-0 in her opening round bout. Though Shea was off her game, according to Meehan, the two were more evenly matched than the score would indicate.

Senior captain Ary Afshar, at third singles, rose to the occasion against Canton's undefeated number three, although she was tagged with the loss, 6-2, 6-3.

"Ary played out her mind," said Meehan with a laugh. "She played the best tennis I had seen her play in six years of coaching her."

The first doubles tandem of junior captain Kelly Stone and freshman Courtney Caron also played their best games of the year to date, but lost 6-3, 6-4.

"They played like I dreamed they could play," said Meehan, who had very high hopes for the this pair, when she matched them together a few weeks ago.

"They were every bit in that match."

Second doubles was the underclassmen duo of Molly Flanagan and Emily Sullivan, and their coach admitted they might have been "in over their heads" against Brookline's unbeaten twosome. Nonetheless, the young Cohasset pair handed in a good showing.

On the boys side, only Golden advanced, but senior captain Jeff Scribner, who entered the tourney with a 6-2 record between first doubles and second singles, lost his in a heartbreaking three-set match, 5-7, 6-3, 3-6.

Scribner's opponent made great use of an impressive drop shot, but Scribner admitted on a different day, the outcome might very well have been different.

Freshman Rob Carpenter, this being his only tournament as a varsity player so far, was beaten in the first round by one of the higher seeded lottery players.

Cohasset had another qualifier for the tournament in sophomore David Ingber, who would have brought a 6-2 record to the tourney in Newton, but he could not attend.

The boys tennis team resumes its league play on Thursday at home against the 1-8 Abington Green Wave, with a chance to clinch their first playoff appearance in over a decade. The Skippers beat Abington last time they played, 4-1.

Green Dragons swamp Skippers

The Duxbury boys lacrosse team showed why they're ranked number-one in Massachusetts and 16th in the nation, jumping on Cohasset early and rolling to an 18-6 victory at Alumni Field.

Cohasset trailed the Green Dragons 3-0 by the time the first quarter was five minutes old. They regained some control at that point, closing the gap to 3-2. The visitors quickly snatched back the momentum, however, and never again relinquished it, as they bumped the lead to 5-2 at the end of one period, and 10-2 at the half.

"If there's a better team in the state, I'm glad they're not on our schedule," said Coach Kevin Orcutt after the contest,. Duxbury was athletic, and they had outstanding passing, shooting and ground ball skills. They sensed we were a little awed, and

With loss to Hull, baseball team now stands at brink of post-season disqualification

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The boys baseball team for Cohassete took a big step at qualifying for the playoffs last Thursday with a 5-3 win over Carver, but lost serious ground with a divisional 11-2 loss to the Hull Pirates this week.

In the win in Carver, the Skippers received a complete game from junior starter Tim Straughan, a converted catcher/reliever. Straughan gave up a few scratch runs early, but settled down and seemed to get stronger as the game in the later innings.

"He gets better as the he goes on," reported third year coach Robert Knurek. "When you go into the fourth, fifth and sixth, eighty percent of his pitches are strikes."

Straughan improved his record to 2-0, and has been exactly what Cohasset's rotation needed as their ace, junior Nick Bolster, will be out for at least a few more weeks with a detached retina. Straughan has also been helping his own cause, leading the team in the offensive categories of average and RBIs, with .410 and 11 respectively.

Senior third baseman Tim Grassie tied the game in the fourth with a two run double, and junior first baseman Matt O'Grodnik followed in the fifth with a two out two-run single that ended up being the game winner.

The offense got started in the game by sophomore rookie second baseman Mike Snowdale, who hit an RBI single in the fourth, prior to Grassie's knock.

Snowdale, who slugged a one-hopper into the bleachers at Milliken Field against Norton, has been a pleasant surprise this season with his bat, as well as with his very steady fielding.

The 11-2 loss to Hull, on the other hand, sadly, was not the worst loss to the close SSL rivals. The Skippers were no-hit in the first go round this season by their All-Star ace Ken Sault. Nonetheless, this one stung, leaving Cohasset on the brink

Post-season a win away for golf team

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset golf team is just one win away from its first tourney qualification in recent memory.

With a 5.5- 3.5 decision over league rival Abington on Monday, the Skippers notched their fourth win of the season. The team currently stands at 4-5-1 heading into today's season finale at Cohasset Country Club with Norton, a team the Skippers beat on the road last Thursday, 7-2.

"It's great that we have our fate in our hands like this," said coach Torin Sweeney, who took over the floundering program this spring. "I'm really proud of the way the kids have competed all season, and now they're in a position to do something that hasn't been done at this school in a lot of years."

Sweeney, Cohasset High's assistant athletic director, wrestling coach and assistant football coach, admits he's not much of a golfer and really didn't know what to expect from this team when practices began back in March outside of the fact that he returned a couple of the team's top duffers.

Consequently, he can't really say he's surprised by his team's success. It has become clear, however, that others are surprised.

"A lot of coaches have told me that we weren't really that highly thought of going into the year," reported Sweeney. "It's always nice being considered an over-achiever.

"Of course, I don't know how much I had to do with that," the rookie coach added with a chuckle. He admits up front that his limited expertise in golf has relegated him primarily to a role of helping his players "make good decisions."

Our guess is the coach, who's worked wonders over the years keeping tiny Cohasset High among the elite wrestling programs, is selling himself a little short. To a grappler, virtually everyone you talk to will tell you what a great motivator and tactician Sweeney is.

In Monday's huge win over Abington at Cohasset Country Club, Wil Prendergast was the medalist for the Skippers, shooting a 38. Dave Bouchard and Ted Gledhill took all three of their available points, and Will Moody chipped in with a vital point.

The Skippers nearly sewed up its post-season berth last Friday, but came up just short with a 5-4 loss to Hanover. Prendergast and Jay Bertovich got all three of their possible three points atop the order, but some short putts down the stretch wound up costing Cohasset.

Golf Notes

On May 24th, Sweeney will take his top three golfers — Prendergast, Bertovich and Gledhill — to Squirrel Run in Plymouth (Carver's home course) for the South Shore League Meet.

Lacrosse is here to stay

MIKE SPELLMAN

I'll be honest: I really didn't know what to think of lacrosse heading into this spring season.

Like a lot of people of my generation, along with a pretty fair portion of the remaining population, this is a sport for which I hadn't quite gained an appreciation.

I'd watched it on TV a few times, primarily for curiosity's sake, but the closest I'd come to observing it first hand before this spring was the occasional fleeting glance from a couple of hundred yards away while sitting at a baseball or softball game.

I'll be honest again: I was more than a little surprised, as well as aghast, when I heard reports earlier this spring of more local student athletes going out for lacrosse than baseball and softball. I mean, we're talking about America's favorite pastime here…aren't we?

Sure, I'd seen all the kids walking the street with their lacrosse sticks — particularly in Cohasset where there seems to be an alarmingly (at least in my mind) high ratio of sticks to bats and mitts — but to hear that there were more laxers than batters in a towns like Norwell and Scituate was, I confess, somewhat distressing.

OK, so this news served as something of a wakeup call for yours truly.

A little research revealed that the popularity of lacrosse was indeed growing at an alarming…er rapid rate. Clearly, this is more than a trendy sport of the moment; it's here to stay for a while.

Several high schools have added lacrosse to their spring sports offerings in the last few years. It just became a varsity sport for the first time this year in Braintree and Scituate, and for the Norwell girls, but already interest appears extremely high.

In Scituate and Norwell, the programs remain privately funded by boosters programs, but in both cases there is a strong push from within town and school government to add funding to the athletic budgets for these programs.

So, daunted with this knowledge, I figured it was time to swallow my old ideals and check out lacrosse for myself.

You can probably imagine my surprise when I actually found myself following the action, and, what is more, enjoying it. And this is despite the fact that I'm lost on most of the strategy, nuances and rules. For example, can anyone explain to me why it is legal to repeatedly whale away on an opponent's shoulder pads but illegal to nudge him slightly from the backside? But I digress.

Lacrosse, I soon discovered, possesses many of the qualities I find so appealing in hockey and football. Speed, athleticism and strength are all essential to success, as are guile and hand-eye coordination. There's also more of a team concept at work than I suspected. In addition, it's a lot more physical than I thought it was. I guess it says a lot about me that I consider this a drawing card….but again, I digress.

An additional parallel I can now draw to hockey is that lacrosse is a game that becomes infinitely more enjoyable when witnessed in person. My favorite comeback to anyone who declares to me that they're not a hockey fan is "Oh, then I guess you've never been to a hockey game."

Whereas the excitement of football, baseball and even basketball (though to a lesser extent) translate pretty well to the tube, hockey is, in my opinion, diminished greatly by broadcasting. The main culprits: the puck is too small to continuously follow and much of the best action takes place off camera/away from the puck. I can now offer the same opinion about lacrosse.

Another big factor in favor of lacrosse: clearly, spring is The Season. Not only is this the preferred time in these parts for outdoor activity, but there was an opening for another sport. Unlike the fall, which features football and soccer (another sport I was originally slow to accept) splitting the interest and athletes pretty much down the middle, and winter, with hockey and basketball, the spring has had only baseball.

Baseball, as much as it still pains me on some level to admit, is not for everyone. High school athletes who prefer team sports to essentially solo endeavors such as track, golf and tennis, should have another option. And, as I can now attest, lacrosse isn't a half bad option.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse has mixed week

The Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program continued a very strong season despite some setbacks in winning four games and losing three during the week ended May 13.

The Cohasset Blue 12-and-Under (12-U) team opened a Wednesday doubleheader at Hanover against Hanover 2, and quickly fell behind 2-1 before settling into a groove and taking charge of the game.

Cohasset closed the first quarter with a 5-4 lead, which it extended to 8-5 at the half. Jared Dick made nine first-half saves, keeping the game much closer than it could have bene. Mark Flibotte and Michael Bunstein each scored twice, with Nick Zappolo, Chris Davis, Parker Berg and Charlie Czerkawski scoring once each.

The two teams traded goals in the third quarter, with Czerkawski scoring early in the quarter and Peter Ernst scoring late, to close the third stanza at 10-7.

From there, however, it was all Cohasset, as Ernst scored two quick goals to open the fourth quarter, followed by tallies from Dan Trendowicz, Berg, Bunstein and Matt Burgess to close the game at 16-9.

Justin Hollis closed the door with five second-half saves in the net. Teddy Galligan, Nathan Porter, Trendowicz and Zappolo tallied assists on the day.

Next, the Cohasset White 12-U team faced off against Hanover 1, and also fell behind 2-1 just a few minutes into the contest. From there out, the two teams traded goals until half-time, where the score was knotted at 5-5.

Corey Chase scored two goals and an assist, Jared Kinch had one goal and an assist and Peter Oswald and Mike Grimm scored once each in the first half. Ryan Kucinski also picked up an assist.

The third quarter belonged to Hanover, which scored two goals and held Cohasset to one late score from Jeff Brown, off a nice feed from T.J. Kennedy. Hanover's goaltender dominated third-quarter play, and the unbeaten White team entered the fourth quarter trailing for the first time all year.

From there, however, Cohasset dominated. Hanover could get the ball over the midfield stripe just three times in the final period. Meanwhile, Cohasset kept shooting, and taking the ball away from Hanover whenever the home team was able to come up with it.

Chris Mills tied the game off a feed from Oswald, and Grimm got the game-winner on a feed from Austen Lanzillotti. Lanzillottti then scored an insurance goal all on his own. Jared Dick made two of his 14 saves on the day to snuff Hanover's last bid at a comeback, and Cohasset came home 9-7 winners.

On Sunday, the Cohasset program was split between two locations, and wound up winning at home against Scituate and losing on the road in Plymouth.

Cohasset's 10-and-Under team had a tough morning and early afternoon, playing both of Plymouth's 10-U teams and losing first 9-4 and then 4-3.

The locals played hard, but had a tough time keeping possession of the ball. Plymouth carried the day with respect to ground balls and offensive pressure. Wes Ulmer had a strong performance in the goal for Cohasset, which looked good early in Game 1, jumping out to a 3-1 first quarter lead on goals by Gabriella Flibotte, Owen Landon and Chris Brown.

Plymouth battled back in the second quarter to tie the game 3-3 at the half, then pulled away to a 7-3 lead in the third quarter. Justin Yeager scored for Cohasset in the fourth quarter, but Plymouth added two more to make the final 9-4.

After a brief respite, the Cohasset 10-U team lined up for its second contest of the day. This time, Plymouth jumped out to a quick two-goal lead, before Justin Yeager netted a goal on a fine passing play from Andrew Bell and Danny Brady to pull Cohasset within one at the end of the 1st quarter.

Plymouth controlled the second quarter and led 4-1 at the half. The second half was back and forth, with Cohasset pulling to within one with a minute to play. However, Plymouth was able to run out the clock to secure the win. Geoff Evans and Danny Brady were Cohasset's second- half goal scorers.

Next up, Cohasset Blue played its worst game of the season, dropping a 9-5 decision to a Plymouth team.

Jared Dick, with six saves, and Sam Parker, with four, kept Cohasset in the game, as Plymouth jumped to a lead it never relinquished.

Cohasset's few highlights were of the unassisted variety, part of the proof that the team had trouble completing passes and moving the ball all day against a bigger, stronger Plymouth team. Michael Bunstein scored twice to lead Cohasset, with Dan Trendowicz, Nick Zappolo and Matt Burgess each scoring once.

With the loss, Cohasset Blue fell to 5-3 on the season.

Meanwhile, back at home, the Cohasset White 12-U team kept its record unblemished in a close game versus a Scituate 2 team whose only previous loss of the year was against the Cohasset Blue squad. After Scituate jumped out to a 1-0 lead 10 seconds into the game, Cohasset took control for the rest of the half, going into the break with a 5-3 lead.

Jared Kinch scored twice, with Corey Chase, Jeff Brown and Michael Grimm picking up single goals. Grimm added two assists and Brown one.

Cohasset extended its lead to 7-3 early in the third period on goals from Kinch and a beautiful Jeff Brown-to-Chris Mills connection before Scituate roared back to tie the score.

But for the second consecutive game, Cohasset White dominated the fourth and deciding quarter. Mills finished off a beautiful feed from Corey Chase to give Cohasset the lead, and Michael Grimm scored the eventual game-winner on a cross-crease pass from Jared Kinch. Austen Lanzillotti converted a feed from Grimm and Ramsey Davis scored his first of the year to ice it. Justin Hollis, who made seven saves in the game, shut the door on any Scituate comeback hopes as the Cohasset White squad moved to 7-0 on the season.

The Cohasset 14-U team concluded the day by dominating the second half and downing Scituate 12-5.

The first quarter saw Cohasset jump out to a 4-1 lead on goals by Aidan Buick, Jon Grimm, and Jake Previte. Scituate pulled even in the second quarter, so that the game went to the half knotted at 4-all.

Cohasset exploded in the third quarter with six goals to put the game away. Chris Barber started a textbook fast break with a great feed to Grimm, who found Previte on the crease for the finish. Continuing the strong open-field play, Mark Donovan won the face off, sped between two Scituate defenders, and passed to Grimm for another goal. The third quarter also saw Mike Martone and Jonathan Littauer score their first goals of the season on feeds from Grimm and Buick respectively. Sam Steele had an excellent quick-stick in traffic to round out the third-period scoring.

Along with the scoring barrage in the second half, the defense was strong, with Casey Coleman, Matt Baroudi, Mike Pecca, and goalie Chris Simms holding Scituate to only one goal.

Jon Grimm finished a very strong day with the final score in the fourth quarter on a hard bounce shot. With the game well in hand, Cohasset gave some defensemen a chance to play midfield and middies to play attack.

The Cohasset program takes to the field again on Friday, with a trip to South Boston for night games, followed by road games for all but the youngest team on Sunday.

Lady Skippers eyes state tourney berth

Win over Sharon lifts laxers to 5-4-1

The Cohasset girls varsity lacrosse team bounced back quickly from Thursday's loss to Hingham. During Lacrosse Spirit Day on Friday at Alumni Field, the girls won convincingly against Sharon.

Cohasset dominated from the outset, eventually winning 17-6. Junior second home Kristin Sheerin once again led the way for the Lady Skippers with three goals and one assist.

Sheerin now has 36 goals and four assists for the season. Both sophomore center Maura McKenney and junior attack wing Emma Gardner also registered hat tricks. The Lady Skippers also got goals from starters Kate Grimm, Suzanne Lynner and Nicole Turgiss.

Sophomore reserve Sarah Brady scored her first varsity goal. The defense again excelled behind Julie Lordan, Katherine Coyne and goalie Gia Petrakis.

Coach Cathy Gaudiano was able to give substantial playing time to a number of the freshmen players on this young squad, and first year high schoolers made the most of their opportunity. Ashley Faber, Cara Flint, Jessie Guild and Meghan Marr all contributed goals. Freshman Libby Meikleham played well on defense.

Coach Gaudiano was pleased with the effort: "This Sharon game was my first real opportunity to give significant playing time to some of our younger players. They have been dedicated and practiced hard all year. Today they showed they are ready to compete at the varsity level."

The Cohasset girls now stand at 5-4-1 and have their eyes firmly fixed on a state tournament berth. This week Cohasset plays at Falmouth (Wednesday) and at home against Barnstable (Thursday at 7 p.m.). Coach Gaudiano believes that this squad has an excellent chance to make the post-season, particularly if it plays well this pivotal week.

Summer sports programs are offered

The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer a variety of sports camps during the summer of 2001, designed specifically and individually for boys and girls, ages 4 through 18.

North East Speed Training Camps — Milliken Field, Mondays and Wednesdays, June 25, to July 24; boys and girls ages 9 to 13, 6 to 8 p.m., price $85.

they took advantage. But I'm proud we played them to 3-3 in the third quarter, and forced them to never let up."

Cohasset's scoring was led by soph midfielder Tom Anderson, with a pair of goals, and senior Ronan Buick, with a goal and an assist. Paul Previte, Curt Kahn and Matt Davis had scores, and Lane Forrer and Eric Libby each picked up an assist.

Junior goalie Kyle Weber made 22 saves in a courageous performance.

The loss was further marred by a third-quarter injury to Buick, Cohasset's leading scorer with 75 points. Buick suffered a yet-to-be-diagnosed shoulder injury, and never returned to the game. At the time, he was the third-leading scorer in eastern Massachusetts.

"Losing Ronan for any time will be tough, but we'll fight through it," said Orcutt. "We anticipate getting Greg Figureido back in time for Marshfield, and his physical presence will help us. We just have to keep our heads up, win a couple of games in the tournament, and make sure that this won't be Ronan's final game in a blue and white jersey."

After the game, athletic director Ron Ford announced to the team that Hanover, who the Skippers were scheduled to play on Wednesday, had forfeited the game. The decision, said Ford, had been made by the school principal, as a result of a team rules violation. With the forfeit, Cohasset will go into its next contest on Friday against Pilgrim rival Marshfield with a 10-3 overall record, and a 7-3 slate in the Pilgrim. The Skippers close out the regular season by travelling to Catholic Memorial on Monday, and hosting Ashland on Wednesday, May 23 in a night game starting at 7.

Skippers Dominate Barnstable

On Friday, before a raucous Alumni Field crowd on Spirit Night, the boys topped league rival Barnstable, 20-0, behind senior midfielder Ronan Buick's six goals and two assists. The shutout was Cohasset's first ever in Pilgrim Conference play.

The Skippers, who had beaten the Red Raiders 14-3 earlier in the season, featured a balanced attack in this one. Cohasset's four veteran attackmen – Paul Previte, Jason Moore, Curt Kahn and Eric Libby – each had a pair of goals and two assists. Soph middie Tom Anderson also had two goals. Other scorers included middie Matt Davis (one goal), goalie Kyle Weber (one goal, playing attack), freshman attackman Mike Devine (one goal), senior middie and co-captain Lane Forrer (a goal and an assist), and soph middie Nick Spirito (one assist).

"We meshed as a team tonight," said Coach Orcutt. "The senior defensive captains, Justin Langham and Geoff McWilliams, played extremely well, as did freshmen Steve Davis and Conor Buick. And Lane Forrer and Ronan Buick set the tone on offense, fighting for every ground ball and finding the open man with their passes."

Cohasset opened the scoring three minutes into the game, with Buick taking a feed from Moore. Leading 4-0 at the end of one period, and 10-0 at the half, Cohasset controlled the ball more than 80 percent of the game, never giving the Cape Codders a chance to mount a sustained offense.

Kyle Weber had seven saves in the first half, before giving way to freshman Nick Murphy, who preserved the shutout with a pair of second-half stops.

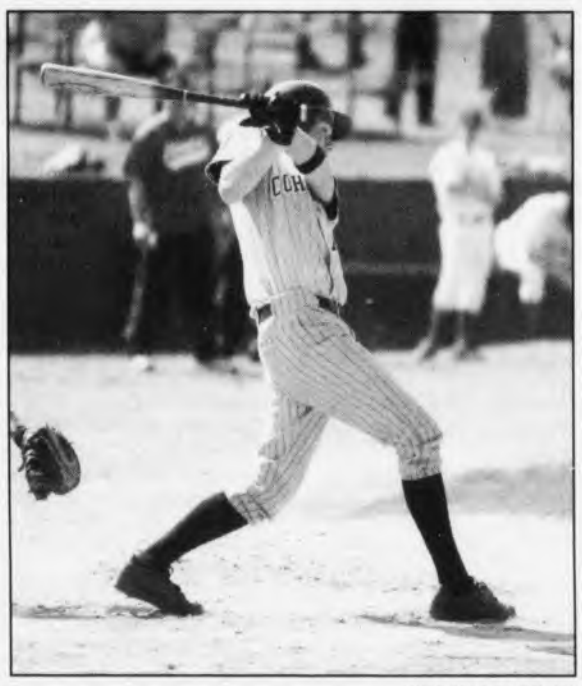
of playoff elimination.

Second year captain TJ Bilodeau was tagged with the loss in this one, giving up four unearned runs before giving way to O'Grodnik.

Freshman reliever Mike Dooley pitched a scoreless seventh to close out the game.

The loss left the Skippers in need of winning five of their last six to get into states, as their record now stands at 5-9. There still is a chance though, with very winnable games coming up against Hanover, Norwell, Abington, and two against Avon.



"We just have to play clean baseball," said third year varsity coach Robert Knurek.

However, clean baseball is what Knurek has admitted to being his club's biggest problem. Costly errors late in games led to one run losses to league opponents Abington and Norwell earlier this year.

Knurek estimated his team had given up 30 unearned runs already this year. The only error-free everyday player is third year starter Robin Murphy (sorry if I am jinxin' you, Murph... if you get an error in your next game, I take full responsibility).

"He is a rock in left field," said Knurek of Murphy's steady play.

Knurek's already reeling pitching staff has felt the effects of the defensive miscues, as senior starters TJ Bilodeau and Grassie have combined for a 2-8 record, despite the staff's earned run average standing at a very impressive 3.33.

Senior class parents plan post-prom party

By Cynthia Dedes
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Parents of seniors, Cohasset High School Class of 2001, we need you! Planning is done and work is ready to begin. Come find out what's happening. Come lend a hand. Starting Sunday, May 20, at 11 a.m. in the small gym at the high school, we will begin to create our surprise theme going-away party. Many hands are needed to pull this off successfully.

This will be the fourth year that parents have hosted a party after the prom. Decorations and entertainment will be planned around the theme selected for this year. The theme is always a surprise but we can share, that over the years, casinos, live bands and caricature artists have been part of the fun.

Support for this activity has come from local businesses, civic organizations and others. Donations of gifts for prizes and raffle items, also monetary donations made past senior class celebrations great going-away parties. The class of 2001 is a class made up of great young people. They have excelled academically — remember the MCAS scores. They have been outstanding athletes in all sports — remember how proud we were when they won the 2000 banner for soccer. They have been active in community service projects as well, helping in activities such as the Appalachian Service Project.

If you have some time to give and want to volunteer, call Kay Langham at 781-383-2748 or Allison Ulmer at 781-383-2672 or Rick Shea at 781-383-2384.

If you would like to help with a monetary donation, please send your donation to Cohasset High School, Post Prom Party, c/o Steve Langham, 100 Pond St., Cohasset, MA 02025.

Please contact Connie Afshar at 781-383-6087 if you would like to donate a prize or raffle item.

This is a worthwhile event that helps keep the prom-goers safe in a drug-and-alcohol-free, all-night party.

Schools to make extra effort to recycle more

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's not just town residents that are being asked to increase their recycling efforts; now it's the Cohasset Public School system.

"They do recycling now, we're just asking them to put more emphasis on it," said Selectman Merle Brown, a member of the town's Recycling Committee.

Blue recycling bins are familiar sights throughout the town's classrooms and hallways, but recycling isn't just putting paper into a big pile anymore.

In a letter recently sent to Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey and the School Committee, the Recycling Committee urged the schools not only to recycle more, but also consider additional waste-saving measures, as well as a "motivated cadre of students" to oversee efforts in the three town schools.

"Right now they take all the office paper and throw that and newspapers all into one bin," said Brown. "We're asking them to separate office paper from junk mail and boxes and corrugated cardboard."

Brown explained that while it costs the town $15 a ton to dispose of newspaper and other junk paper, Cohasset can actually collect between $80 and $125 a ton for office paper. "Newspaper recycling will never give you as much as office paper," Brown said.

"We're also going to talk to the cafeteria about their recycling," Brown continued. "The company that does the food uses a lot of Styrofoam, and we're going to see what we can do to get them to use different materials."

The committee also recommended double-sided copying, and more use of recyclable paper. "It closes up the circle," Brown said about using recycled paper.

Not only does the committee recommend these recycling strategies, it practices them too. An informational packet given to the Mariner containing letters sent to various town officials was printed on both sides. Brown has chided Town Manager Mark Haddad during Selectmen's meetings for his liberal use of paper in preparing the board's informational packets.

"We've talked to the school committee before, and they do recycling, we just want them to do more," Brown said. "We'd like them to set up a program on posters and put them around school on recycling, how to do it, what it's about."

Curriculum Coordinator Ruth Fennessey will oversee the new recycling effort in the schools.

She said the first step is a critical look at the department's current recycling habits.

"We have to look at how recycling is part of our curriculum, and what we all are doing in our practices to conserve," she said.

She said the Osgood School has a basic program, and bins are spread throughout classrooms in the Deer Hill and middle/high school.

Fennessey said she plans on looking at other programs in the area to implement within her own district.

"We're starting to look at what needs to be done," she said.

The push comes right before the town's new Pay-As-You-Throw trash program goes into effect. Starting July 1, Cohasset residents will have to pay $1 for every bag of trash they throw away at the Recycling Transfer Station. The program is an effort to boost recycling within the town's homes. Cohasset pays $100 a ton to haul away regular trash, but can get $25 a ton for plastic, $30 a ton for corrugated cardboard, and is able to dispose of glass at no charge.

Some facts about recycling

The following environmental fun facts are courtesy of the Cohasset Recycling Committee:

- The United States is the most wasteful country on the planet
- Each American produces approximately five pounds of waste per day
- Every day U.S. businesses generate enough paper to circle the earth 20 times
- Every ton of recycled paper saves approximately 17 trees
- Americans throw away 2.5 million plastic bottles every hour
- Each year Americans throw away 25 billion styrofoam cups
- 500 years from now the styrofoam coffee cup you used this morning will be sitting in a landfill
- About 40 percent of all waste in U.S. landfills is paper products
- It costs Cohasset $100 a ton to dispose of regular trash
- It costs Cohasset $15 a ton to get rid of paper
- It costs Cohasset nothing to get rid of glass
- Cohasset gets paid $25 a ton for plastic
- Cohasset gets paid $30 a ton for corrugated cardboard
- Cohasset gets paid between $80 and $125 for office paper

When teaching dance is a labor of love

Successful studio holds annual recital

By Mary M. Donius
CORRESPONDENT

What do a roasting pan, a bubble machine and a dozen bejeweled beige bandanas have in common? Somehow, Janet LeClair Campbell, director and choreographer of Dance Steps dance studio used them, and dozens of other unexpected items, as props during Seasonal Sensations, her seventh annual dance recital.

Campbell's springtime extravaganza has become a cause celebre for her students, their families and the scores of friends, former pupils and, well, fans, who pack the performance each year. The more than 500 people filled the Hingham High School auditorium to capacity on the evening of May 5 were not disappointed.

"It's my husband's favorite day of the year," said Susan Johnson, whose daughter Holly received her sixth consecutive perfect attendance trophy during the evening's events. "Better than Christmas. Better than anything."

This year's theme, Seasonal Sensations, celebrated holidays with musical selections as diverse as "The Addams Family Theme," "Happy Holidays" by N'SYNC, "Riverdance" and "Daddy's Little Girl." Past themes included Passport Please featuring songs about different countries, and Give My Regards to Broadway, a survey of show tunes.

The driving force behind all of the excitement is Janet LeClair Campbell, a second-generation dance teacher and former professional dancer who performed in commercials and movies during her eight years in New York City. Anyone who's seen her Tuesday and Thursday classes — at which she teaches 85 children, ages three and up– or at her recitals knows that, for Campbell, teaching dance is a labor of love.

Campbell decided to open her dancing school when she was afraid her daughter, Alyssa, then 5, would give up ballet because of the seriousness and formality of the school she attended.

"All I could think about was how much fun we used to have at my mother's school," said Campbell. "I wanted to use my professional experience and teach the kids good habits, but still have fun. So I started talking about it with friends and neighbors at the beach and by the end of the summer I had 45 girls signed up." Today she teaches pre-ballet, kinderdance and jazz.

"I wanted to use my professional experience and teach the kids good habits, but still have fun."
— Janet LeClair Campbell

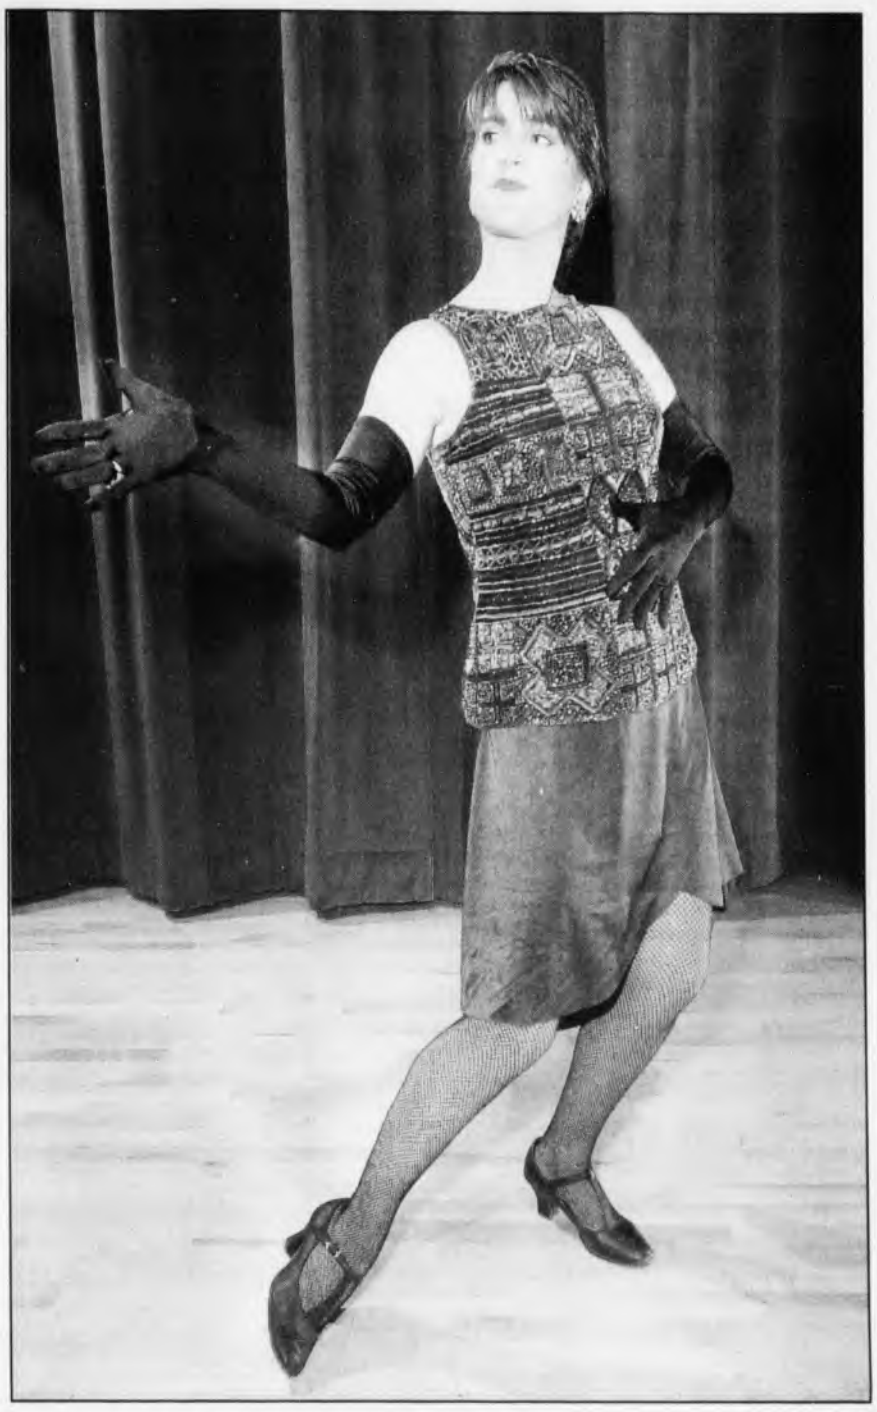
For Campbell, whose grandmother costumed the dancers at her mother's school, dancing and performance is still a family affair. Her husband, Joe, emcees the recital while her son Ben, 8, manages the props. Her daughter Alyssa, now 11, is always in the show and her mother, Joyce LeClair, uses her 40 years of experience to serve as stage manager. Longtime friends volunteer to entertain the kids backstage, take tickets and do whatever else needs to be done before, during and after the performance.

Campbell started dancing when she was two-and-a-half and spent countless hours dancing and teaching at her mother's Saco, Maine school. By age 12 she was a member of the Maine State Ballet Company and later trained with Balanchine dancers in Maine and New York. She also studied Jazz and Tap. Before she opened Dance Steps, Campbell did a lot of volunteer choreography for school and church groups.

But what really attract parents, and kids, to Campbell is not her impressive resume, but her philosophy about teaching, dancing and performance. "She really lets the kids express themselves," says Johnson, "they all look very different and have different skills. She doesn't make the better ones shine. Instead, she develops their love for being on stage. They feel secure with Janet and it's great for their self-esteem."

Campbell believes that success at dance — especially for children — isn't about body type or certain looks. Instead it's about being comfortable with your body. "Talent is making the best of what you have," she says.

One thing Campbell does believe in is attendance. Kids today, she believes, have a lot of distractions. But dancing is an individual art that requires a lot of attention and practice.



"My motto in life is show up and pay attention," she says. "If the kids show up and pay attention, I can teach them to dance."

To that end, Campbell, who never missed a day of school until she was a senior in high school, gives perfect attendance awards and 5-year participation trophies at the end of every year. This year she awarded 21 trophies for perfect attendance and seven for five years of dancing.

"Knowing they were going to be rewarded for perfect attendance really motivated my girls," said Martha Doggett, whose daughters Irene, 8 and Christina, 5, both received perfect attendance trophies.

Campbell loves going to dancing school as much as the kids do. "No matter what I'm doing, no matter what kind of day I'm having, I'm always happier after teaching dance."

For more information on Dance Steps and enrollment for the 2001 – 2002 session call Janet LeClair Campbell at 781-383-0665.

Scituate women injured in Mother's Day crash

A two-vehicle crash sent two Scituate women to the hospital on Mother's Day morning.

Cohasset police said Tracy Barrow, 36, of 109 Booth Hill Road, failed to yield to on-coming traffic when she tried to make a left turn onto Beechwood Street from the southbound lane of Route. 3A at about 7:30 a.m., Sunday.

"It was Sunday and there was not a lot of traffic. If this had happened during the week, we would have been in a real mess out there."

Emergency workers help extricate Laura DiMatteo from her Pathfinder after it crashed into a pole at Beechwood Street and Rte. 3A on Mothers Day morning. DiMatteo was transported to South Shore Hospital where she was treated and released.

Detail officers had to divert truck traffic from Rte. 3A following the accident due to the low hanging wires.

The Nissan Pathfinder careened across the intersection and into a telephone pole, cutting it in half.

Cohasset Officer William Quigley said an eyewitness reported the GMC sport utility vehicle that Barrow was driving cut in front of a Nissan Pathfinder, which was traveling northbound. The two vehicles collided nearly head-on.

When police arrived, the Pathfinder had careened across the intersection head-on into a telephone pole that had been snapped in half and was hanging by the guy wires. The GMC SUV was still in the middle of the intersection with heavy front-end damage, Quigley said.

Investigation at the scene revealed about 30 feet of skid marks from the Pathfinder, driven by Laura DiMatteo, 23, of Hatchet Rock Road in Scituate. Police estimate the Pathfinder was traveling about 40 mph.

Quigley said customers and employees of Fiori's Exxon at the corner helped keep people away from the downed wires. Both women were transported by ambulance to South Shore Hospital where they were treated and released.

The Pathfinder could not be moved right away because police were worried the pole would collapse into the intersection. The vehicle was towed at 12:10 p.m. under the direction of Mass. Electric and the Cohasset Fire Department.

The crash caused a power outage so detail officers were called in to direct traffic at the intersection until power was restored. Trucks were diverted through the Shaw's parking lot because of drooping electrical wires across 3A, Quigley said.

"It was Sunday and there was not a lot of traffic," he said. "If this had happened during the week, we would have been in a real mess out there."

Police cited Barrow, who was not wearing a seatbelt, for failure to yield to oncoming traffic and seatbelt violation.

OUI arrest

Cohasset police arrested Michael W. King, 36, of Country Way in Scituate for operating under the influence of liquor (third offense) after witnessing him allegedly driving erratically at about 1 a.m. Saturday.

While on patrol on Route 3A near Pond Street, police saw a red Ford Escort, which was weaving back and forth, following another vehicle too closely. Police stopped the vehicle when it tried to pass the other car at the 3A and Beechwood Street intersection. The driver of the other car also stopped to complain about King's driving, police said. In addition to OUI, King was charged with following too closely and marked lanes violation.

King was arraigned on the charges Monday in Quincy District Court and a pretrial conference was set, Cohasset Sgt. Robert Jackson said. Jackson said if King, who is charged with a third OUI offense, is convicted of driving drunk, he will face a mandatory jail sentence.

WORSHIP NOTES

Youth ministry

Two fun and faith-filled programs are offered to high school students and recent graduates this summer through St. Anthony Parish Youth Ministry.

One event is a trip, July 20 to 22, to attend the Steubenville East Youth Conference at the LaSalette Shrine in Attleboro. These popular youth conferences are held throughout the country each summer by Franciscan University, a dynamic Catholic university in Steubenville, Ohio that actively cultivates and encourages Christian discipleship. The conference features powerful speakers, song, worship, fellowship and faith formation.

Another program being offered is participation in C.A.M.P.S. (Christ As My Personal Savior), a one-week high school retreat held at Lake Ossipee, N.H. for Catholic youth from throughout New England. A C.A.M.P.S. information night and "make your own sundae" event will be held June 6 at the St. Anthony Parish Center.

Both programs are open to students who will have graduated grades eight through 12 as of this June. For more information, call Bill Coleman at 781-383-0219, Ext. 19.

Also, students who will enter grades nine or 10 this fall must register for the two-year Confirmation preparation program. Registration forms will be sent out next week for students currently enrolled in the religious education program. Parents of students wishing to enroll should call Bill Coleman at the parish office.

Students who wish to be confirmed in grade 10 must attend the two-year preparation program. Volunteer teachers are needed.

St. Stephen's presents musical biblical story

On Saturday, June 7 at 7 p.m., St. Stephen's Players will present "Rescue in the Night." Written by Tom S. Long and Allen Pote, this musical about Daniel is a lighthearted but faithful rendition of the Biblical story of courage and obedience.

Under the musical direction of Fred Guzasky and Linda DeRosa-Coakley, the cast tells the story with songs, such as the "Wisdom Contest" and the "Plotting Song." The soulful "What Will Become of Daniel?" prepares the audience for the menacing lions in "Step into Our Den." Daniel's triumph is celebrated with "Here I Am, Lord" and the exuberance of the entire cast is heard in the rousing finale, "The One True King."

Sometimes laughter has a way of opening people to experience the presence of God. So please come and enjoy the experience for yourself. " Rescue in the Night" will be performed in Walton Rodgers Hall at the church. There is no admission charge; however, a free-will offering will be accepted.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For more information, please call the church office at 781-383-1083.

Tamara Orlowsky's work "Unfinished Symphony" stands on her easel.

Blooming through the darkness

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Tamara Orlowsky has a way of conveying genuine feelings her oil paintings, and at the age of 78, she is producing some of the most innovative art work on South Shore.

Her dark and stirring floral works are a novelty in a medium which is often associated with bright color.

The public is welcome to come view Orlowsky's work at an upcoming show at Artist Alley in Scituate from June 1-30. An opening reception will be held June 10.

Orlowsky, a Norwell resident, has been through a lot in her life, and she sends that message through many of her paintings.

"I work from life and it is my intent to present the essence of the subject, not a reproduction of it," she stated.

Orlowsky said she began painting about 30 years ago when one of her artist friends persuaded her to try her hand at it, and she hasn't stopped since.

But through the years, Orlowsky's paintings have focused on one particular concept—flowers.

"Flowers for me are very important," she said. "If you're in love, you give someone flowers. If someone dies, you send flowers. I think those are two very important things…love and life."

Norwell artist Tamara Orlowsky will show more than 30 of her floral paintings at Artist Alley in Scituate from June 1-30.

The artists' brushes present a colorful character of their own standing before one of Tamara Orlowsky's brilliant watercolors.

Orlowsky's paintings seem to focus more on darker aspects, and in order to get that feeling across in her work, Orlowsky draws from her own life.

"I think artists and poets have created wonderful work by being sad," she said.

In addition to painting on canvas, she also enjoys painting on old pieces of wood and even silk. Orlowsky sometimes mixes her paint with other materials such as flower petals and glue, giving a certain painting a more three-dimensional feel and rougher texture.

Orlowsky said she is generally a happy person, but there have been traumatic and tragic times in her life which still affect her work today.

She was born in the Ukraine, and as she grew up, Orlowsky was forced to witness the horrors of the Holocaust.

"I witnessed so many horrible things," she said. "I'll never forget it."

Orlowsky met her husband at this time and the two escaped the horrors of the Holocaust and were later married in Vienna. They eventually came to America and settled in Ohio. In the late 1970s, they moved to Norwell.

When Orlowsky first began painting, she incorporated her own reflections of the Holocaust into her dark flower paintings. But the feeling of sadness in her paintings became even deeper in 1985 when her husband passed away, and she was left to raise her daughters by herself.

Today, Orlowsky has finished about 200 paintings, 30 or 40 of which will be displayed in her Scituate show. Orlowsky is no stranger to the art world, as she has been involved in a number of individual and group shows. She has also been a member of the South Shore Art Center for about 25 years.

"Flowers for me are very important. If you're in love, you give someone flowers. If someone dies, you send flowers. I think those are two very important things…love and life."
Norwell artist Tamara Orlowsky

"My paintings are very unusual," she said, "and they are all done by feeling and intuition. I think my paintings give people the feeling that they are looking through the window on a rainy day."

Artist Alley is located at 95 Front Street, Scituate.

Weymouth doc pens book on deadly allergy

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Dr. Michael Young wants people to know that cases of being allergic to peanut are not only on the rise, but more importantly, they are deadly.

Young, an allergist and asthma specialist with his own practice in South Weymouth, is so dedicated to the issue, that he recently published "The Peanut Allergy Answer Book."

"Peanut allergy is a legitimate issue these days," Young said, "and it's becoming more of a problem in very young children. I wrote the book because I saw a thirst for information on the topic. Besides that, more and more of my regular patients were asking me 'Where can I read more about peanut allergy?'"

But Young never had an answer for that question because he didn't know of any book which covered the topic of peanut allergy in a thorough manner. He wanted to change that.

In his pursuit of a publisher, Young explained that he got lucky. A patient pointed him Fair Winds Press in Gloucester — a firm delighted with the idea of putting out a book about peanut allergies, because it was a subject never fully addressed in a text.

"This is the first book ever written on it," Young added.

Young said the book is in an easy-to-read, question and answer format, which he said focuses on the subject of peanut allergy in a concise, straightforward manner.

"It's a very short book which summarizes all the common questions about peanut allergy," he said. "It also addresses the practical aspects of how to deal with it."

Young said peanut allergy is so dangerous because "peanut protein" can be hidden in many foods. He added it is possible to diagnose a person with the allergy, but even if a person knows they are allergic to peanut protein, they still might not be able to tell if it is contained in a given snack or entree.

"That's one of the biggest problems," Young said. "And unfortunately, peanut can be potentially fatal. Every year, about 150 people die from food allergy, and most of those deaths are caused by peanut. It's a very scary thing to live with."

Young said there are currently about 1.6 million people in the world suffering from peanut allergy.

Young reiterated that more and more small children seem to have the allergy, but he noted anyone of any age can be affected by it. He added he sees three to four patients a day who suffer from peanut allergy.

"Many allergies can be outgrown," Young said, "but once someone acquires peanut allergy, it is seldom outgrown. Only 20 percent of children outgrow it. The others are stuck with it for life."

Young was approached by Fair Winds Press in the summer of 1999 and began writing in the fall

"I knew it was a book that had to be written," Young said.

"I had a lot of fun writing it, but it was a bit of a task making it user-friendly because I was used to writing for medical journals," Young said. He said the process of writing the book helped him adjust his overall writing style.

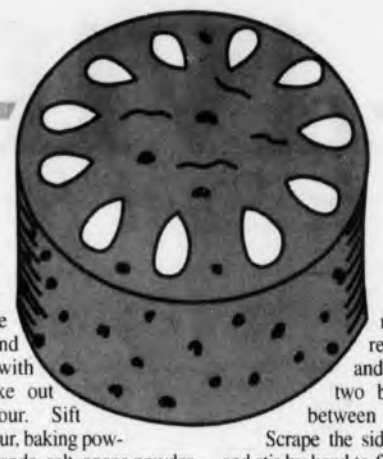
"Doing this book taught me how to be a more personable writer," he said.

Young said he is now getting some great feedback on the book from all avenues of the public.

"It's been fantastic having my patients come in and say they picked up the book, and that they liked it," Young said. "And what's also very gratifying is the fact that my colleagues like it."

"It's a resource people can reference again and again, and hopefully, it will provide some solid answers to a problem that only seems to be getting bigger."
Dr. Michael Young

Young, who is a faculty member at Harvard Medical School, and also practices at Children' Hospital in Boston, and at the South Shore Hospital in Weymouth said he would like to write another book, but he said he wants to pick a topic which has the same obscurity as the issue of peanut allergy.



For now, he will stick to the path of promoting "The Peanut Allergy Answer Book."

"It's a resource people can reference again and again, and hopefully, it will provide some solid answers to a problem that only seems to be getting bigger."

Dr. Michael Young's book can be purchased at stores like Border's Books and Barnes & Noble stores around the are. The book can also be ordered from major online vendors like Amazon.com.

Poppy seed cake

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

There are hundreds of recipes for poppy seed Bundt cakes, and I quickly discovered that these desserts have but one thing in common— poppy seeds! The cake itself is usually made from a variation on a basic yellow cake, although pound, coffee, and buttermilk cakes are also pressed into service. I was in search of a rich, tender cake, one would allow the bright crunch of poppy seeds to shine against a background of subtle flavors.

For starters, I baked a pound cake, a tea cake, a coffee cake, a basic yellow cake, and a buttermilk cake to determine which would be best as a base. Pound cake was a bit too heavy, the tea cake was too delicate, the coffee cake was a bit tough, the yellow cake was quite good, and the buttermilk cake was the clear winner, with a light texture - neither too heavy nor too airy-and a pleasant tang. This recipe included cake flour, a stick and a half of butter, sugar, 5 eggs, buttermilk, vanilla, salt, baking powder, and baking soda.

First I tested the flour. I made buttermilk cakes using cake flour, all-purpose flour, and half cake/half all-propose flour. The cake flour variation was light without being too delicate, the all-purpose flour cake was relatively tough, and the cake made with half cake flour and half all-purpose flour was still on the chewy side. Cake flour was best.

Because this cake would be served on its own, without a frosting, I wanted to make it a bit richer. An extra 4 tablespoons of butter gave the cake more moisture and richness without becoming heavy. Any more than two sticks simply produced a greasy cake. For the poppy seeds, 1/4 cup was the best amount. I wanted crunch and flavor from the seeds, but larger quantities turned a pleasant dessert into a health food nightmare.

Finally, I wanted to build a foundation of flavor as a base for the poppy seeds. I added cocoa powder and cinnamon and soon found that only small amounts were welcome, so I settled on a mere tablespoon of cocoa powder and 1/2 teaspoon of cinnamon.

POPPY SEED BUTTERMILK BUNDT CAKE

This simple cake needs no icing or frosting. Make sure that you do not use self-rising cake flour - that product already contains baking powder.

Butter and flour for preparing cake pan
2 1/2 cups less 1 tablespoon cake flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1/2 teaspoon baking soda
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon unsweetened Dutch-processed cocoa powder
1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
16 tablespoons (2 sticks) unsalted butter, at room temperature
1 1/2 cups sugar
5 large eggs, at room temperature
2 teaspoons vanilla extract
1 cup buttermilk, at room temperature
4 tablespoons poppy seeds

1. Heat oven to 350 degrees and adjust rack to center position. Butter a 9- to 10-inch Bundt or fluted tube pan and sprinkle with flour. Shake out excess flour. Sift together flour, baking powder, baking soda, salt, cocoa powder, and cinnamon into a medium bowl and set aside.

2. Beat cool but not cold butter in a large bowl with an electric mixer at medium speed for 30 seconds. Continue beating, gradually adding the sugar. Beat until light and fluffy, about 3 minutes more. Add eggs, one at a time, beating after each addition. Scrape down the sides of the bowl when necessary. Add the vanilla and beat just to combine.

3. Add about 1/3 of the flour mixture and 1/3 of the buttermilk and beat on low speed until just incorporated. Add the remaining flour and buttermilk in two batches beating between additions. Scrape the sides of the bowl and stir by hand to finish.

4. Place the batter in the prepared pan and smooth the surface with a rubber spatula. Bake 15 minutes and rotate 180 degrees. Bake about 15 to 20 minutes more or until golden brown- the top of the cake will spring back when lightly pressed and a cake tester will come out clean. Remove to a rack and cool for 10 minutes. Place cooling rack on top of cake and invert to unmold cake. Serve barely warm or at room temperature with a sprinkling of confectioners? sugar if desired.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, MAY 17

Fair and sunny astrological weather continues today. The moon travels in adaptable Pisces, interacting with Jupiter and Mercury in the morning and the sun this evening. This is a great day for vacationing. If you are working, be creative. Enjoy a romantic evening with the love in your life.

FRIDAY, MAY 18

Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. Influences today and tomorrow hold high potential for productivity. The Pisces moon becomes inactive at 2:18 a.m. until 4:41 a.m., when an Aries moon takes over. This Aries moon forms a harmonious alignment to Saturn in the morning and Neptune this evening. Because Mars, the planetary ruler of Aries, travels in retrograde, this is not a favorable period for launching large-scale enterprises. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Pluto may spark romantic fireworks this evening.

SATURDAY, MAY 19

Yesterday's advice applies to today as well. The Aries moon sets a quick pace. If you carefully organize your time, you can be most productive. Sidestep irritability, arguments, impatience. Channel high energy constructively. Focus on projects that require physical labor and exertion. Get back on track with exercise programs.

SUNDAY, MAY 20

This is a wonderful morning to take a walk, jog, bicycle. The Aries moon aligns with retrograde Mars, its planetary ruler, at 10:48 a.m. and becomes inactive. Count your blessings; don't get caught up in negative thinking. Influences turn around completely at 1:29 p.m., when the moon enters Taurus. The remainder of the day rates high for relaxing and sharing quality time with friends and family. The sun enters Gemini at 7:44 p.m., remaining there until June 21.

MONDAY, MAY 21

This is a slow-starting, quiet day. The moon travels in Taurus, and the dark side of a new moon begins to take effect. Postpone starting new projects until Wednesday, when favorable influences occur. Instead, plan to get old business out of the way, clean out, prepare for new starts. Take extra time out for yourself. Reassess your values; set new goals. Open your heart to higher visions.

TUESDAY, MAY 22

Start this day with a flexible schedule and upbeat attitude. The Taurus moon aligns with Uranus at 10:06 a.m. and becomes inactive. Make up a list of things to do; stay busy with practical projects. Clean out desk drawers and closets; get your life in order. The moon enters Gemini at 7:12 p.m., and the new moon occurs at 10:46 p.m., 2-degrees of Gemini.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 23

The combination of a Gemini new moon and harmonious Mercury/Uranus alignment prompts you to get new projects off the ground today. Influences are especially favorable before 10:56 a.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious alignment to Uranus. There is one rough spot, however, in effect between 5:50-8:50 p.m., when a polarity of the moon and Pluto occurs. Slow down; think before you speak.

THURSDAY, MAY 24

Astrological sunshine and blue skies prevail today. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter sets the stage for social activities. Influences are prime for vacationing. If you are working, plan a lunch date with friends and colleagues. Chat, surf, network. This is an especially favorable period for meeting people, establishing new relationships, business or personal. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 7:12 p.m., when it opposes Mars. Take it slow and easy in this period. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 10:42 p.m.

FRIDAY, MAY 25

The sun and Saturn conjoin at 4-degrees Gemini, 8:33 a.m., prompting you to focus on practical matters. Fulfill commitments and promises you have made to others. Zero in on work projects you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The moon continues to travel in emotional Cancer all day. Choose your words carefully. Others may be temperamental, hypersensitive, moody. Spend quality time with family and close friends this evening.

SATURDAY, MAY 26

The Cancer moon aligns with Venus at 8:44 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. That means that new starts are off limits. If you are working, finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. An applying alignment of Mercury and Mars may spark arguments, irritability, fast driving. Stop, look and listen. Don't take chances or do anything risky.

SUNDAY, MAY 27

At 1:12 a.m. the moon enters Leo, generating a party mood for the remainder of this holiday weekend. Put personal or business concerns on the back burner; go with your playful side. The Leo moon forms harmonious contacts to Saturn and the sun in the morning. A lunar opposition to dreamy Neptune in the afternoon prompts you to kick back and enjoy.

Dividing and transplanting perennials

Green thumbs up

Mother Nature appears determined to put our landscapes and gardens to the ultimate test this year. A harsh winter season of cold temperatures and prolonged snow cover was succeeded by torrential downpours and flooding. In recent weeks, unusually dry conditions for early spring have sparked brush fires and caused many lawns and plantings to become drought-stressed while summertime heat has dramatically accelerated the progression of foliage growth. The latest trauma was a series of heavy frosts when temperatures plummeted, severely damaging tender foliage and flowers.

This roller-coaster ride of temperature and moisture extremes has taken its toll on our emerging trees, shrubs and perennials. Many plants succumbed during the winter months or drowned during the March monsoons. A stroll through the landscape in early May revealed multiple fatalities including a large number of plants which had endured numerous seasons of adverse conditions.

Perhaps the saddest sight of all, however, was the limp, translucent or blackened foliage and the soggy brown blossoms of early azaleas and rhododendrons that resulted from last week's killing frost. Magnolias, katsura, hydrangeas, wisteria and Japanese maples were just a few of the woody plants whose leaves were seriously affected by this sudden cold.

Despite the apparent severity of the damaged tissue, most of these established plants should recover, with new leaves gradually replacing blackened foliage which will eventually fall off. Tender stems and new growth, which became limp and collapsed, may require pruning back to the older, woodier tissue, creating denser, sturdier growth. In order to push forth new leaves, water is essential, and since a soaking rainfall seems unlikely for the time-being, supplemental watering accompanied by the application of a dilute liquid soluble fertilizer should be considered to boost new foliage production.

In the perennial borders, ferns, astilbes and hostas were ravaged by the cold but the majority of these hardy plants will produce new leaves as the season progresses. If time permits, the removal of damaged leaves, particularly those of large-leafed hostas, will produce a more attractive plant.

Gardeners who tried to get a jump start on the growing season by purchasing tender annuals and vegetables may have learned a hard and perhaps expensive lesson. There is usually little to be gained and much to be lost by planting these delicate plants prior to Memorial Day. When warm weather sparks gardening fever, focus your efforts on tidying the landscape, applying lime and fertilizer, soil preparation and planting trees, shrubs and perennials. Early May is also an ideal time for dividing and transplanting perennials. Cooler, more seasonable temperatures have returned and there is still time to rejuvenate and propagate overgrown clumps of hostas, daylilies, Siberian iris and other exuberant plants.

As a rule of thumb, early spring-bloomers are best divided and transplanted in autumn, and fall-bloomers in spring with those falling in between in either season. If an entire plant merely needs to be transferred to a new location, this can usually be accomplished at any time if the root system is left wholly intact and the plant is protected from hot, direct sunlight until it recovers. When possible, transplant on calm, overcast days, during periods of damp weather, or in the evening, to give the plants time to recover before they are subjected to sun and heat. During this period of dry conditions, a thorough soaking of the root system a day or two prior to the proposed division or transplanting will lessen the shock of disturbing the plant's roots. Due to the premature summer-like warmth this May, some plants may have developed too far to tolerate severe division and may have to wait until autumn.

Overgrown clumps of perennials such as hosta, daylilies and Siberian iris, are usually best lifted in their entirety which can be a major undertaking. Once out of the ground, large, unwieldy clumps can be tackled by inserting two pitchforks, back-to-back, into the clump and pushing against one another to initiate the splitting process. I have sacrificed several older kitchen knives to my garden tool box to assist in the division of dense, tightly knit perennials. A knife should be used only to cut through the crown of the plant (about 1-inch deep, where the leaves meet the roots) and then divisions eased apart to minimize severing roots. Old, woody sections from the center of clumps of Siberian iris, sedum, chrysanthemums, astilbes and tall phlox, to name only a few, are often best cut out and discarded and the outer, younger, healthier divisions replanted. Be sure to replenish depleted soils with organic matter before replanting and water transplants thoroughly and often until reestablished.

Citizens' group won't support Greenbush report

CAC wants to send T back to drawing board

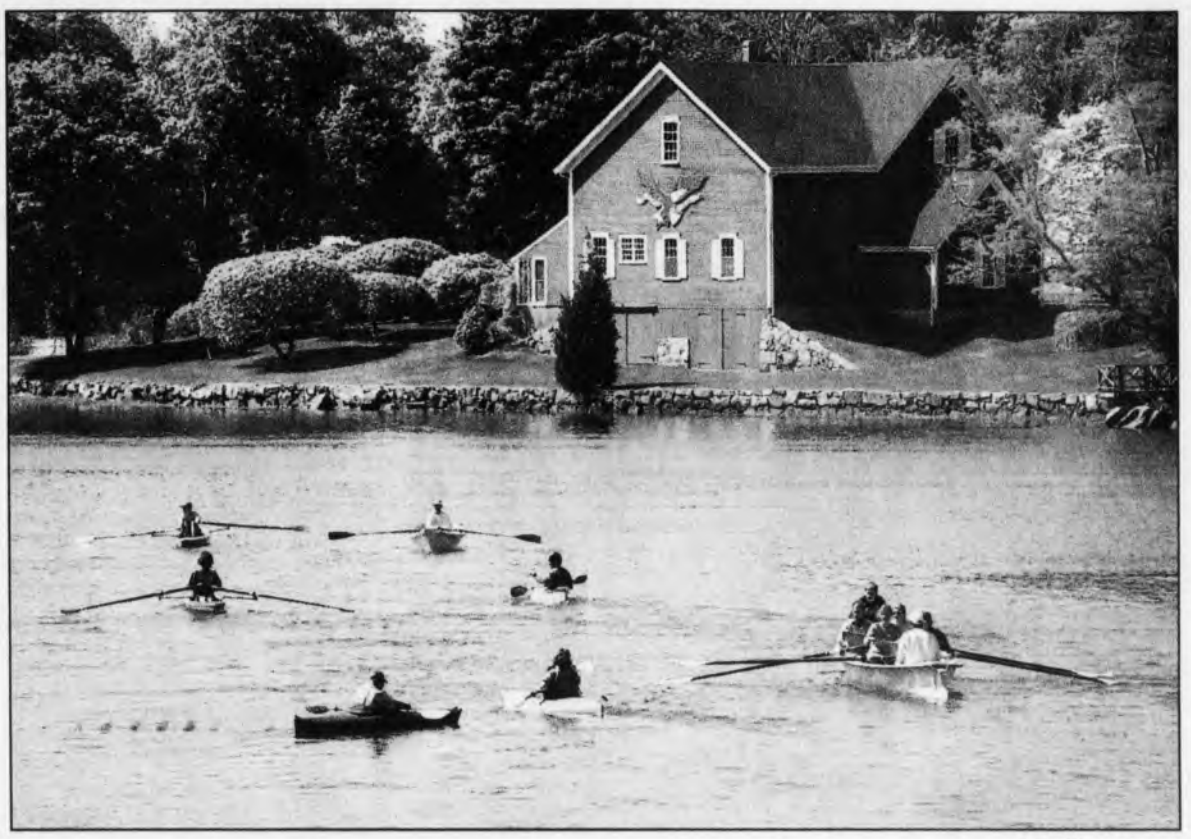
By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The citizens group charged with reviewing the MBTA's final Greenbush environmental impact report has ruled the document to be inadequate, and urged state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand to order more studies and analysis of the plan to restore the long-dormant commuter rail line.

"It just has some things missing from it," said CAC member Thomas Gruber, of Cohasset. "It has some holes in it as well as some information we feel needs to be reviewed."

Of the 14 members present at the CAC's last scheduled meeting last Wednesday, 10 voted to rule the document inadequate. Four others signed a minority report saying the document was adequate, and two members — Susan Phippen of Scituate, and James Clarke of Weymouth — sent letters saying they were not prepared to take a position on the impact report. Both are currently embroiled in mitigation agreement negotiations with their respective towns and the MBTA.

Those names on the majority opinion were Joseph Norton, the committee chairman, Michael Lang, William Reed, Edward Fegreus, Gruber, Richard Cook, Alexander Macmillan, Brian Noble, Katherine Reardon, Jonathan Warner, and Janet Murray.



Richard Prone, Terry Fancher, Martha Gjesteby, Gregory Guimond and William Grimes signed the minority opinion.

But even though the CAC was formed by the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs, Norton said it's unclear how much weight their opinion will carry.

Doug Pizzi, spokesman for Durand, said how much weight the CAC opinion, or any opinion, carries depends on how good of an

Town eyes two spots for senior housing complex

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The town Senior Housing Committee received permission to seek interest in the building of affordable senior housing units on sites off Route 3A and Pleasant Street.

"The purpose of this committee is to develop senior housing units in town for Cohasset residents," said committee chairman Jim Lagrotteria. "Because of the way the market is, we can't go out and spend $1 million on a parcel of land. We have to look at town-owned property."

Lagrotteria, along with fellow committee members Dorothy Keville and Margy Charles, presented selectmen with four possible town-owned sites that could be developed with senior housing: a corner of land behind the Little League field off North Main Street, land at the rear of the old Osgood School, a 10-acre parcel off Route 3A next to Stop & Shop, and a 14-acre parcel of former school-owned land off Pleasant Street.

Selectmen were concerned the Little League development would hinder access to the Cohasset Swim Club located behind it, and narrowed the choices down to the Route 3A site and Pleasant Street site.

Lagroterria called the Route 3A site, which was looked at a few years ago as a possible site for a new town cemetery, "high and dry" and able to hold "a combination of one and two story buildings."

He said there were wetlands towards the front of the property, but that it wasn't a big issue.

Selectman Thomas Callahan disagreed.

"It is an issue. It was a major issue for the cemetery," he said.

"Because of the way the market is, we can't go out and spend $1 million on a parcel of land. We have to look at town-owned property."
Committee Chairman Jim Lagrotteria.

The Pleasant Street site could hold up to 36 units in one building, and is more centrally located, the committee said.

However the main question selectmen had was how the town could finance the development while making sure it doesn't lose control over who buys the units. Generally, if a town used federal money to construct affordable housing units the town isn't able to restrict those units to just town residents.

Some towns have given town-owned land to private developers to build affordable housing units for town residents.

"My biggest concern is that we don't give up a piece of property, build a building and accomplish nothing because we can't control who lives in it," said Selectman Michael Sullivan. "We need to make sure we are helping Cohasset people."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town could sell the piece of land for $1, and in exchange place deed restrictions saying a certain amount of units have to be reserved for Cohasset seniors.

Lagroterria said the project's success depends on finding a private developer in Cohasset. He said the committee was contacted by a town church which said they are interested in organizing a coalition of churches to help finance the project. He declined to say which church was interested.

He pointed out that the Lincoln School in Hingham was converted to senior housing units by selling it to the Glastonbury Abbey for development. Although just 20 percent of the development's residents were from Hingham originally, that number is now 55 percent.

Keville said the demand for senior housing units in Cohasset is there. She said the committee recently conducted a survey and 46 percent of residents wanted more affordable rental units in town. Another 17 percent wanted clustered homes to own, and 15 percent were interested in townhouses as part of a retirement village.

"We've now done two surveys that say there is not enough senior housing in town," she said.

The committee asked the board for $3,000 to "go out and make the pitch" to interested parties about developing the sites.

"We want to sell them the idea, and then have them come back to the zoning board and planning board and Town Meeting," said Lagroterria.

Selectman Merle Brown supported the proposal.

"They're worked very hard and met constantly. I think we should support them and go out and look at the sites."

Haddad said he will ask the Advisory Committee for the money.

Relay for Life hits the mark

Hundreds turn out for event

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The American Cancer Society came more than $120,000 closer to finding a cure for cancer thanks to efforts of more than 800 participants in last weekend's Relay for Life.

"It went awesome," said Craig Bleicken, one of the event's co-organizers. As of Monday, the American Cancer Society had received $123,000 in donations, with more still coming in.

Bleicken said he thinks the final total will be near $130,000.

Even though gray rain clouds hovered over Alumni Field Friday afternoon, the relay kicked off promptly at 3 p.m. after some brief words by state Rep. Garrett Bradley and the Rev. John R. Mulvehill of St. Anthony's Church.

AT&T cable

Selectmen met with AT&T Cable representative Lou Russo Tuesday and worked out a deal to permanently move the cable TV hub into the Doerr Gymnasium, thereby saving the town thousands of dollars.

The current cable TV hub, which provides transmission of Town Meetings at the Sullivan Gymnasium and school committee meetings in the middle/high school library, has to be moved due to the looming renovation and construction project at the school. The original plan was to temporarily move the hub to one location during construction, and then again after construction, at a cost of $13,000 to the town.

Russo said the move to the Doerr Gymnasium will be a one time move, and cost the town $4,500.

Mealy Post liquor license

Selectmen authorized a one-day liquor license to the George H. Mealy Post #118 American Legion for their annual Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake.

The fundraiser will be held at Sandy Beach on Saturday, Sept. 8 from noon until sunset. The liquor will be delivered at 11 a.m. and be removed at 7 p.m.

Bradley announces low-cost prescriptions for veterans

State Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, announced this week that Tom Kelley, Commissioner of Veterans' Services for Massachusetts has informed him that veterans who, with a discharge other than dishonorable, are eligible for prescriptions at $2 per prescription for a 30-day supply.

Veterans need not have a service-connected disability, nor is there an economic test to qualify. Veterans who are eligible must enroll in the V.A. Health Care system and see a V.A. doctor to verify the need for current prescription. There is a minimal charge for the visit to the V.A. doctor usually covered by the veterans' own health insurance.

To find out more about V.A. health care benefits, veterans are advised to call or visit the veterans' service office at Town Hall. The V.A. can be called toll free at 1-800-222-8387.

Making her mark around the world

Radio show host wraps up global lecture tour

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

When Scituate resident Ilana Marks started her radio show in June of 1997, she hoped for success similar to that of her cable-access program "On the Mark."

Stirring the political pot with guest forums, candidate debates, and candid discussions about town policies was Marks' focus on her television show, but when she made the switch to radio, she wanted to reach a broader demographic over the airwaves.

Her holistic and metaphysical live call-in radio show which airs on Marshfield radio station WATD Sunday nights from 7:30 to 9 p.m. quickly drew a large audience from all over the South Shore. But Marks could not have known that her radio program would one day take her far beyond the region and country on a global lecturing tour.

Buoyed by invitations via the Internet to take her show on the road, Marks decided to accept some of the many offers she's received last fall and began a three-month journey bringing her metaphysical message to groups all over the world.

To keep her family with her, Marks took her two children out of school knowing the education they would receive on the trip could not be duplicated in a classroom.

"I was getting invitations from people in Australia and Hawaii asking if I was interested in coming to lecture there," Marks said. "People had heard the show through the Internet, or simply had spoken to someone who had been on the show before."

Marks made stops in Hawaii, Australia, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom giving lectures on metaphysical ideologies consistent with her New Age themed radio show.

"It just took on a life of its own," Marks said.

Because she only gave about a dozen lectures during the three-month trip, Marks said she was able to make a vacation of it, taking in some sights in between working.

After giving a lecture in Honolulu, Marks, her husband and their two kids then flew to Sydney to partake in a week-long mind, body and spirit conference. After the conference ended, the Marks' flew across the country to Perth for another lecture.

From Perth, Marks' then flew to Singapore en route to India, a stop where no lectures were on the docket but a spiritual healing and valuation was sought. Indulging in Indian customs in Bombay and spending almost a fortnight in Ashram, Marks's then eased the transition to Western civilization by giving talks in London.

But when she arrived back at home, Marks remained so inspired by the tour she decided she had to try to recapture it on paper.

"Three days after I came home, I just totally got inspired to start writing," Marks said. "I never thought I'd write a book about anything, but I was inspired and in three weeks, I wrote a book. It just came flowing out of me, so fast that I didn't even type with punctuation or anything."

Currently in the process of being edited, Marks has spoken to myriad publishers about bringing her as-of-yet untitled book to the mainstream.

"I'm very excited about this book because its a whole other realm that is going to open up for me," she said.

But Marks realizes that it was the scope of her radio show that enabled her to experience what she did, and is intrigued by the seemingly endless possibilities in radio.

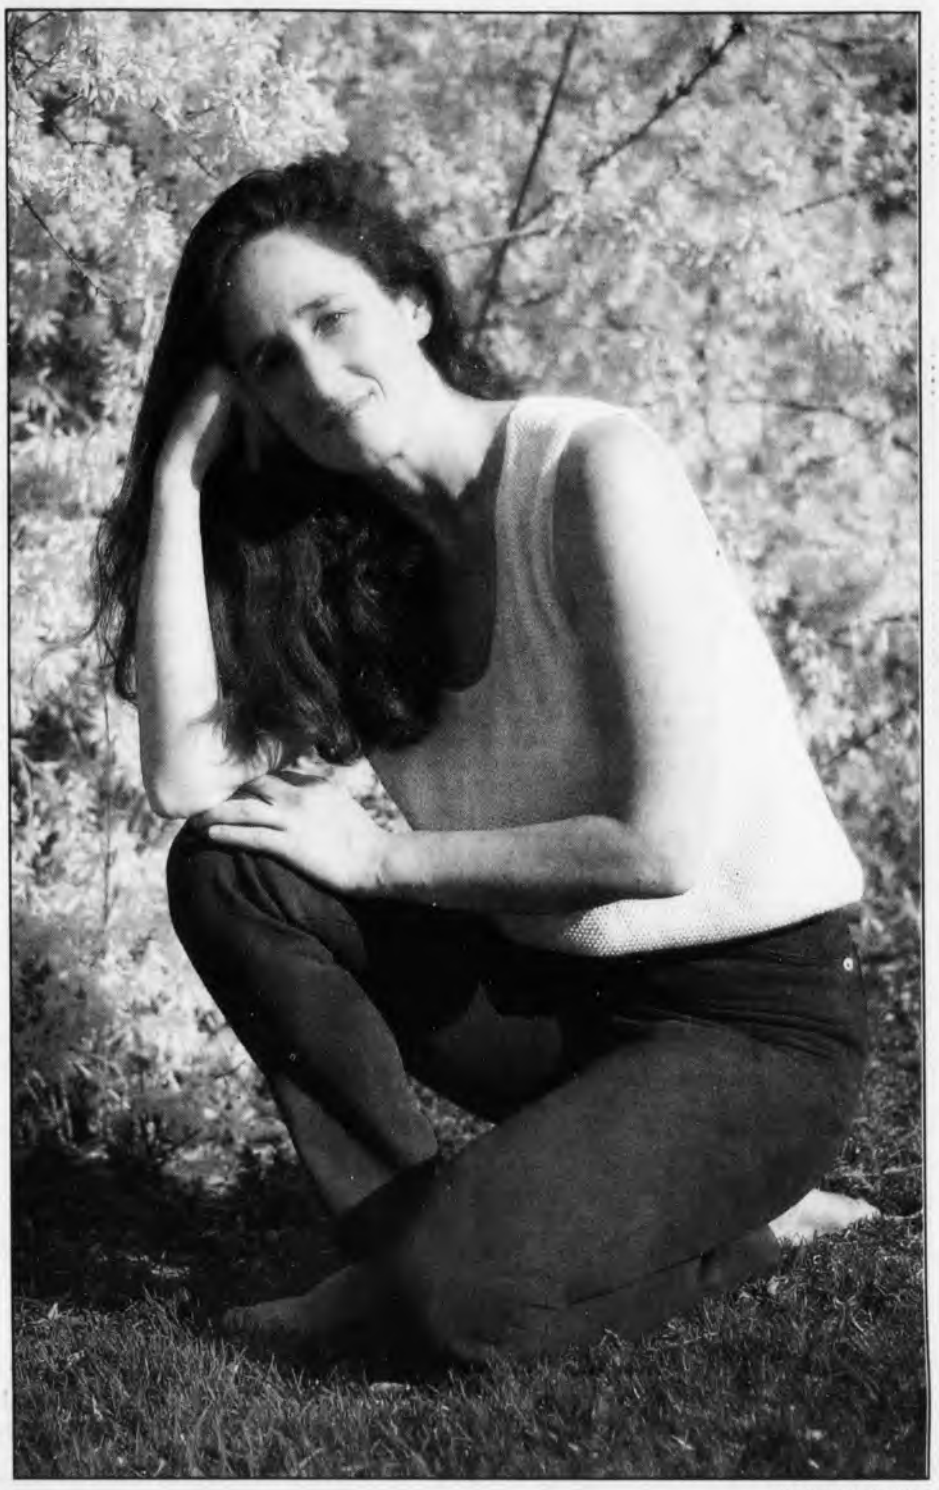
"There are a million political shows, a million sports shows," Marks lamented, adding that once her show hit the airwaves, it was an instant success. "People started calling in right away. Then we started going out on the Web and I was getting all these offers from people around the world who wanted to be on my show."

The "offers" were from a who's who of the holistic and metaphysical world, certainly adding a dynamic boost to not only her shows popularity but its credibility as well.

The highlight was when she introduced Dr. Deepak Chopra as a guest, a world renowned spiritual advisor.

"Deepak was wonderful, his mind is very sharp; it was very exciting," Marks said, adding that other guests include Kenny Loggins, Greg Braden and Prema Baba Swamiji.

Marks is hoping the next step for her radio show will be syndication. And while she has become an international player over the Internet, Marks said she likes the traditional ideology of basic radio. She hasn't ruled out a return to television either, because she said giving demonstrations in holistic healing would be much easier done with the visual elements possible on TV.



Marks, who in 1996 ran for Selectman in Scituate, and was once a vocal member of the anti-Greenbush group the Coastal Coalition, has ruled out returning to television with her old political talk show format.

"One of the things that has happened to me from getting all this work and from expanding internationally with the work I'm doing is that it's given me a different perspective," Marks said. "When I see an issue that people are getting really upset about and focusing all their energy on, I see that that is just a really small piece of a very large puzzle, and there's no reason to get so upset at everything.

"What I'm doing now is on a much more global, universal level, and I think that this is truly the wave of the future. And my book is about that; it's set against India, but includes (the message from) the whole trip, (how) each thing leads to the next. Now I feel I'm really doing what I want to be doing."

Marks said that she will focus on the message of her show, and take the next step when it comes to her. But for now, it's the mind, body and spirit connection of her radio show that gives her a driving force in her life, and Marks is excited about it's potential.

"I really didn't realize that it was going to grow this big," Marks continued, "but now I do know that what I'm doing is just the tip of the iceberg and it's really going to grow exponentially now because I've opened up to a larger audience."

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

REMEMBER OUR VETERANS

Hello, Cohasset. It is finally raining a little, hopefully we will get enough to reduce some of the pollen a little and give the ground and flowers some much needed rain. I am hoping however, for it to clear a little by this weekend as so many wonderful events are taking place. I hope that no matter what your plans are, you allow some time to stop and honor our wonderful veterans. Have a festive and fun-filled weekend wherever you may be going and keep your fingers crossed for just a little sun!

HAPPY BIRTHDAY!

Well, I have to send some Happy Birthday wishes out to a couple of cool guys. The first, my little guy Cody who is turning six on Thursday, May 24. Cody, we know that this week is really crazy and just a little hectic but we all know that it is your Birthday. We are sure that you will have a great day celebrating and wanted to wish you a very special day. We love you!

Sharing this special day is another young man, Adam Smith who is turning 12! Happy Birthday Adam! Twelve just does not seem possible!

CLASS CLOWN

I had an email from a man by the name of Reinhold (Rennie) F. Bergstrom. Rennie, according to him was a class clown from the class of 1951. Mr. Bergstrom is looking to get in touch with any members of his class for his upcoming visit. If any of you have any information, please email him at rennie@olypen.com or P.O. Box 1187, Port Townsend, WA 98368.

GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

As many of you already know, this weekend has many great things in store. The CMHS is celebrating its wonderful Golden Anniversary in many exciting ways and wants all of you to attend! The events start on Friday morning, May 25 at 9 a.m. There is going to be an all-school assembly held in the Sullivan Gym at CMHS featuring guest speakers from the last 50 years. Some names you may be familiar with are Jerry White, Matthew Trask, Carol (Conway) Bulman, Nina Steele Welford and several others. This assembly will be followed at 10:15 a.m. with a ground breaking ceremony at the Alumni Field. Both of these events are for the public as well and we encourage all of you to attend if possible. An all-school cookout for the staff and students will follow. On Saturday, from 1-5 p.m., you can come to CMHS for an afternoon of reminiscing, tours, wonderful memorabilia, refreshments and music. Staff, friends and family will be on hand from the last 50 years and it will be a time to remember and get ready for the changes in store for the high school. Lilly (Carbone) Sestito will be singing and proclamations will be given by Senator Hedlund and Representative Garret Bradley. It will be a wonderful time for all.

SOLD OUT PERFORMANCE

On Friday evening, also at the Sullivan Gym is the awesome, sold-out performance of "Ball in the House", an acapella group of young men who rock with music, enthusiasm and talent! This show is being sponsored by the Deer Hill fifth grade students and is going to be a night filled with fun. Radio Disney Boston will also be on hand with free ice cream, games and prizes, and a lot of music!

This whole weekend winds to a close on Monday with perhaps the most important part of the weekend. Our Memorial Day Parade is starting at 10 a.m. and will wind its way down through town and end up at the harbor. This is the time to come out and honor all our veterans and clap, wave and a great time with your friends, family and neighbors.

PRE-PROM PARTY

It is Prom time for our seniors and so many things are taking place around town to celebrate this time. One of those great things is the Pre-Prom party being held on June 1 from 5-7 p.m. Because there will be no photographer at the Prom itself, this is a great way to get all those beautiful pictures taken in a beautiful setting. Parents, make sure to bring your checkbooks and come to see how great everyone looks for this exciting night. A photographer will be on hand and pictures can be taken and ordered on this night. Also, for all in town who want to come and see our seniors, this is the time to do so.

TIME AND TALENT AUCTION

This Saturday night, May 26 at the Second Congregational Church, The Time and Talent Auction is being held and believe me, you don't want to miss it. The list of available items includes; trips, full meals, cruises and sails, gift baskets, art and so much more. It is a wonderful way to spend an evening and walk away with some fantastic items. It starts at 7:30 p.m. and make sure to come with your checkbook in hand. Another great event to fill this holiday weekend.

NEWS FROM TEXAS

Well, here is a blast from the past and a wonderful one at that. Many of you will remember Ilene and Bill Colwell along with their twins, Loni and Jodi. Ilene was our devoted and beloved secretary at the Joseph Osgood School for many years. She and her family moved to North Texas and she recently sent me some news of the girls. Loni graduated from Clemson University in Clemson, South Carolina with a Bachelor's degree in Business Management with a minor in Human Resources. She will be working for Fluor Daniel Corporation in Sugar Land, Texas as an International Relocation specialist. Fluor Daniel is one of the countries top construction/architectural consulting firms with offices in 25 countries. What a surprise for all when she wound up in Texas of all places! Jodi graduated from Radford University and was the recipient and inductee to the National Honor Society. Jodi was Dean's List for five semesters and will be working at the main headquarters for the United Way. Jodi graduated with a Bachelor's in Communication with a concentration in Public Relations. The entire Colwill family misses everyone back home and wants to be remembered to all! This is certainly some worthwhile news to hear and it is so good to hear from such wonderful people.

ART CENTER AWARDS

On Friday, June 15 at the opening of the South Shore Art Center's Festival on the Common, the five scholarships given annually by the Art Center will be awarded. Four of the scholarships are made to graduating high school seniors who have been accepted by a school of fine arts or an accredited institution of higher learning. The winner of one of the two Fred E. Bergfors and Margaret Sandberg Award is: Kelsey Henderson, a resident of Cohasset who attends the Cambridge School of Weston. Kelsey's extraordinary artwork impressed the jurors. She will pursue her art studies at the Rhode Island School of Design next fall. The Art Center congratulates Ms. Henderson for the outstanding quality and creativity of her portfolio. Her work will be on display at the Art Center's festival on the Common, June 15-17. Please call the South Shore Art Center at 781-383-2787 or visit www.ssac.org for information on the Festival and the many opportunities for education and exhibition throughout the year.

OUTSTANDING STUDENTS

I would like to offer a heartfelt apology to the families of the remarkable children in this next piece. Cara Foley and Corey Sullivan, both Juniors and Ashley Ulmer and Elizabeth Ingber, both seniors traveled to Washington this past February to participate in the Presidential Classroom Scholars Program, a leading civic education program. They were able to gain a behind-the-scenes look at federal government and come away with a greater knowledge and appreciation for it all. While there, they joined hundreds of high school students from across the country and abroad and took part in seminars representing each branch of government, the military, media and business. Additionally, the students were able to go on a private tour of the White House, have appointments with their Senators' and Representatives offices and have a visit to a foreign embassy. The Presidential Classroom calls for outstanding student leaders and in order to participate in this wonderful experience, juniors and seniors must hold a B average or higher OR rank in the top 25 percent of their class. What a great adventure for all of you to have had!

That is all news for this week. Make sure to send all that you have to me no later than Monday at noon for it to be published in that week's edition.

From Stars and Stripes to Beanie Babies and baseball cards

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

He's known throughout the South Shore as the affable owner of Cohasset's Pastimes collectibles. But long before Elliot Goldberg opened the popular sports cards and Beanie Baby haven, he was a military journalist in Germany whose articles were oftentimes published in the prestigious armed forces newspaper Stars and Stripes.

After his basic training in Fort Dix, N.J., Goldberg, who served in the U.S. Army from 1969-72, was off to Fort Benjamin Harrison in Indianapolis and the Department of Defense Information School for 14 weeks of intensive classroom study dealing with the ins and outs of military journalism.

"It was really basic, concise writing, along with military protocol," said the personable Goldberg. He paused and added with a laugh, "There's the right way, the wrong way and the army's way."

Goldberg graduated from the school in Dec. 1969 and was stationed in Furth, Germany, just outside Nuremberg, at the 4th Armored Division Public Information Office. The Fourth disbanded just under two years later and the 1st Armored Division out of Texas moved in.

Goldberg covered a wide-range of stories for the Rolling Review, an army newspaper published bimonthly by the 1st Armored Division. He advanced from the rank of Specialist E-4 to Specialist E-5, the equivalent of a sergeant, while banging out articles on the typewriter.

One of Goldberg's front-page stories chronicled six weeks of training of soldiers from C Trp (Troop), 2nd Sqdn (Squadron) and 4th Cav (Cavalry) at Tennenlohe, Germany. The exhausting training included simulated drills and operation of the Sheridan Tank.

In the June 26, 1971 issue of Rolling Review, Goldberg wrote: "While here, each crew went down Range Six on a wet and dry run. Main gun fire was simulated with the coaxial machine gun, and the .50 caliber machine gun was also fired."

In Goldberg's interview with Lieutenant Colonel Calvin R. Bean, the commanding officer of the 2nd Squadron and 4th Cavalry, Lieutenant Colonel Bean hailed the fighting power of the Sheridan and its ability to disable enemy tanks.

"The Sheridan is more than a tank. It is one of the finest pieces of anti-tank equipment today. To be professional in its operation, the entire crew must know everything about it."

Goldberg's contributions to Rolling Review included a quirky, music column entitled "For The Record." The column reviews the latest releases, musician profiles and soon-to-be-released music.

In the Hot 45s section of the Sept. 5, 1970 issue, Goldberg noted that The Carpenter's single "Close to You" was an "exceptional seller" having held the number-one position for four weeks.

Goldberg also predicted the recently released Creedence Clearwater Revival's "Cosmo's Factory," the newest Eric Clapton album, a double-release live Doors album and Santana's latest work would be viewed favorably by the public.

"Some new releases that have recently hit the scene will make a huge dent in the charts in the coming weeks," Goldberg wrote.

Goldberg also became an accomplished photographer while working as a staff reporter for Rolling Review. Two week's worth of the schooling at Fort Benjamin Harrison delved into photojournalism, but it wasn't until Goldberg was snapping photos for his writing assignments that his talents with the camera became apparent.

Elliot Goldberg

His most dramatic photos were those taken at a scene of a horrific helicopter crash he covered. As his photography flourished, more and more of Goldberg's work wound up on single-page photo spreads.

During his four years in the service, Goldberg was able to see much of Germany and Italy. Although most of the German people spoke in "broken English" Goldberg would converse with them in their native tongue.

"It's just out of courtesy to learn someone's language if you're in their country," said Goldberg. "They were much more receptive to it. The people would be more patient with you when asking for directions if you were attempting to speak their language, no matter how much you struggled through it."

Goldberg enjoyed taking long rides through the German countryside and likened the landscape to northern New England. "Germany was beautiful country," he said. "It reminded me a lot of the hills in New Hampshire and Vermont."

In his travels, Goldberg saw the construction of the Olympic Village in Munich, which only a year later became the tragic setting for 11 Israeli athletes. Goldberg also visited picturesque Florence, Italy, an experience he said, he didn't fully appreciate as a soldier in his 20s.

"It was a shame," he said. "At the time, I didn't find an appreciation for the arts the way I do today." Goldberg remembers Lake Lucerne in Switzerland as "one of the beautiful parts of the world."

When Goldberg was discharged from the army in 1972, he never considered pursuing journalism as a career and downplayed his writing talents. "I never really thought I had much talent at it," he said. "I never had that burning desire to write."

Instead of a writing career, Goldberg eventually became a salesman and spent the better part of 21 years on the road as a salesman. Goldberg admits the lifestyle finally caught up with him and after the death of his mother and two major back surgeries in the course of year, he walked away from road sales for good.

"I just had it with a life on the road all the time," he said.

Goldberg, though, had always dreamed of opening his own store, but never felt the time was right to pull out all stops and move ahead with his own establishment. It wasn't until he married Claudia Darling in 1986 that his dream was rekindled.

Goldberg started to dabble in sports cards, buying a pack now and again, to the point where he had an extensive collection. He never had a complete set until Darling bought him the 1986 Topps Baseball set while on a trip to New Hampshire, shortly after their wedding.

From there, the seed had been planted and Goldberg decided to hit the sports card show circuit in Massachusetts. His first show was at White's Restaurant in Feb. 1991. He eventually took over as the show's promoter and began to hold sports shows of his own in Randolph and Rockland.

Along with his wife, Goldberg opened Pastimes in 1994, a decision he has never regretted.

"I told him that life was too short," Darling said. "It was a true leap of faith."

At first, the store dealt strictly in sports cards and memorabilia, much of which Goldberg and Darling obtained at various shows throughout New England.

Still, the store had room for expansion to bring in a more varied assortment of customers. "Little girls would come in and say there was noting for them," said Darling.

Goldberg has always had a good "ear" for what the hot product was and made it a priority to provide a generous stock of Pogs, Magic and Pokeman cards. The breakthrough, though, came when the Beanie Baby phenomenon took the country by storm. Goldberg started slowly with the Beanies, but it was apparent that product was white hot and it was the route to take.

Now, along with cards, sports memorabilia and Beanie Babies, the store also sells plush, stuffed animals and a more varied assortment of products. "That made the whole family happy," Darling said.

Both Goldberg and Darling have found the experience of owning a store to be exhilarating. The business side, they said, is only a part of the satisfaction Pastimes has given them.

"The best thing, besides the obvious that it's self-sufficient, is the great people we've met and the friends we've made," Goldberg said.

Darling agreed wholeheartedly. "People are very loyal," she said. "It helps that Cohasset is a small town. You get to know a lot of people."

Along with Cohasset regulars, there are also a large number of regulars from Scituate. Goldberg and Darling enjoy the kids the most.

"We're seeing kids growing up right before our eyes. We hear when they get their drivers license, and we see them graduate from high school. It's really cool. It's fun just watching them grow up."

This weekend marks the seventh anniversary of Pastimes' opening and the store is doing better than ever. It was a dream that Goldberg, with a little push from Darling, carried out.

But there are other things he also wants to do in the coming years. Goldberg said he'd like to show his wife the European sites he first laid eyes on 30 years ago.

"There's a lot of Europe I would love to share with my wife," he said.

Lincoln's Gettysburg Address

As the nation prepares to celebrate Memorial Day, it seems appropriate to recall the words of Abraham Lincoln who paid homage to Union soldiers who gave their lives in the Civil War at the battle of Gettysburg.

Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense, we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us the living rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us — that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion — that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

(Abraham Lincoln delivered his famous Gettysburg Address on Nov. 19, 1863. President Lincoln was invited to make a few remarks at a dedication ceremony for a national cemetery to honor Union soldiers who died at the battle of Gettysburg July 1-3 of that year.)

A safe summer and holiday weekend

Summer is the most dangerous time of year for kids, according to a recent study by the National SAFE KIDS campaign. With Memorial Day and the arrival of warmer weather which brings them outdoors, children are at greater risk.

In a first-ever national report on season trends of fatal and non-fatal, unintentional injury among children, the National SAFE KIDS study found that May through August account for nearly half of all injury related childhood deaths. July is the most deadly month for children.

Accidental injury remains the leading killer of children age 14 and under. According to SAFE KIDS, this summer children will be rushed to emergency departments nearly three million times for serious injuries and an estimated 2,550 children will lose their lives due to an unintentional injury. Public health and medical professionals have long assumed that childhood accidental injuries follow a seasonal pattern. During the summer months when children are out of school, lack adequate supervision, and spend more time outdoors, the risks to children are heightened, according to SAFE KIDS.

By looking at data compiled from 1991-96, SAFE KIDS found that nearly half of all accidental, injury-related deaths occur during the summer months. Some 12 percent of all deaths occur in July. Approximately 45 percent of deaths among children 10-14 years of age occur during the summer. Other interesting findings are that 47 percent of all deaths in the mountain states occur during the summer months, and drowning is the greatest summer risk for children ages 14 and under.

Dr. C. Everett Koop, former U. S. Surgeon General and chairman of the SAFE KIDS campaign, urges parents to stress safety with their children. "While we encourage children to be active and spend time outdoors, they need to understand the consequences of not taking safety precautions and should remember to wear a bike helmet and ride restrained in the car." He added, "Parents need to know that regardless of their children's age, it is ultimately their responsibility to provide their children with the proper safety devices and adequate supervision."

SAFE KIDS also commissioned polls looking at the safety attitudes and behaviors of adults and children, ages 7 to 12. The survey found that while a majority of parents, 61 percent, understand that summer is the most dangerous time of year, most kids, 56 percent, underestimate the dangers of the season.

According to one poll, 70 percent of children said that their parents worry too much about them being hurt in an accident, while only 38 percent knew that "accidents" — not violence (selected by 51 percent) — were the main cause of injury and death.

According to a second poll, many parents are putting their kids at risk knowingly. For example, the poll found that 33 percent of parents said they would allow their children under the age of eight to ride a bike without adult supervision.

Memorial Day ushers in a season of outdoor activity. Take the time to review bicycle and swimming safety precautions in particular with your children before the busy summer season gets under way.

(The National SAFE KIDS Campaign is the first and only national organization dedicated to childhood safety. Supporters include Johnson & Johnson and Nickelodeon. For more information on preventing childhood injuries visit the website www.safekids.org or call 202-662-0600.)

Food Pantry says thank you

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Food Pantry wishes to express our gratitude to the Cohasset Post Office and all its carriers for their recent Postal Food Drive benefiting our Pantry and clients.

We received an abundance of non-perishable foods thanks to the generosity of the households of Cohasset who donated food and household products. The quality and quantity of these donations was overwhelming.

We wish to also thank Dennis Reardon at the Post Office for coordinating this drive along with Postmaster Stephen Cabezas. Finally, we are grateful to the hardworking volunteers who spent many hours moving and sorting the large quantity of food.

Our shelves are now full, and we are deeply grateful to the community for its generosity.

Money is wise investment

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing in response to Russell C. Reeves' letter, 'Real' Cost of Runway Battle. I am in sympathy with his general position, even though I was a sponsor of Cohasset's article to invest $30,000 in a response to the runway environmental impact statement. Why should the towns of Hingham, Hull and Cohasset be spending anything, if the review process works as it is supposed to?

In fact, our research has discovered an attempt by Massport to blatantly discriminate against our towns. Our projections indicate a possible decline in property values in the range of 7–10 percent if the runway gets built, not to mention the impact from toxic jet fuel emissions.

We will have a lot to say in our joint response to the EIS, thanks to Bill Golden, our lawyer leading the response, as well as Paul Schomer, the world's leading aviation noise expert, and Paul Flaherty from Environs, worldwide experts on air quality.

The towns were wise to vote the money. There are ways to reduce existing noise. Preventing over $100 million in property value declines is worth the investment.

Family appreciates memorial tribute

TO THE EDITOR:

We would like to express our thanks for a truly memorable tribute to Clark during the relay for life held last weekend.

To Ann Marie Goff, the energizer and organizer of his team, our utmost praise and respect for her abilities to organize, promote and excel as captain (she raised over $6,000); to Larry Souza, a heartfelt thanks for his kind words spoken and the hats that he procured for the team; to Ron Goodwin for the work he did to make the hats so special; to Hap Pompeio for letting the team use his tent, and for setting it up; to Ron Ford for his efforts to make sure the field was "just right" and for attending to all of the details that made the Relay what is was; to Ed Mulvey, who walked the track twice (on crutches) in Clark's honor. Finally, to Lynn Craig, Victor and Gordon for giving us the honor of leading the luminary parade...many tears were shed by us but out hearts were full of love and thanks.

Clark dearly loved his town, his field and his friends. He was proud of his role in the Relay for Life, and was certain the monies raised would help to find the cure for cancer. We all are.

Committee members thanked for Greenbush work

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Board of Selectmen, I would like to take this opportunity to thank you and congratulate you on all of your hard work in assisting the Board of Selectmen in developing a mitigation package and agreement with the MBTA for the restoration of the Greenbush Line.

This has been a long and difficult process to ensure that the town of Cohasset and its residents are protected during this restoration project. As you are aware, the Board of Selectmen has signed a mitigation agreement with the MBTA this past Tuesday, May 15. This would not have been possible without your hard work and dedication in protecting the town of Cohasset. The board strongly feels that the mitigation agreement that it was able to enter into with the MBTA is one that, not only protects the town, but also assists the town in addressing other issues that affect Cohasset.

Once again, the Board of Selectmen feels fortunate to have such hard working and dedicated residents who are willing to give their time and energy to protect and preserve the town of Cohasset. The board appreciates all of your efforts and looks forward to working with you again in the future on this and other projects. Once again, thank you and congratulations.

Mark W. Haddad
Town Manager

This letter was in selectmen's correspondence, and was sent to all past and present mitigation committee members.

Summer theater days recalled

TO THE EDITOR:

Reading Roger Leonard's reminiscences about the early Music Circus brought back recollections of the season of 1954 when I worked at the summer tent theater as an apprentice. That was in the days of the "musicals," before rock concerts and professional wrestling became part of the local entertainment scene. In that year there was a resident company consisting of men's and women's singing choruses, the male and female corps de ballet and orchestra, as well as production people. The women's chorus featured a number of graduate students from the University of Indiana School of Music, and the music director was the eminent Hans Busch of the musical German family of that name. He was a member of the Indiana University faculty. The resident company was here for the summer and the leading actors and actresses changed each week; some "commuting" between Cohasset and the Melody Tent theater in Hyannis; that is, performing in one show while rehearsing for the next week's show at the other theater. Those here for the season often resided in private homes in or near the village center. In that year the orchestra's conductor was Arthur Norris, a distinguished English musical conductor. Staples in the repertory of the summer tent theaters were such older musicals as "Desert Song," "Carousel," "Anything Goes" and "Show Boat" (that had been the first Cohasset production), as well as more recent shows as "Paint Your Wagon," "The King and I" and "South Pacific." Later on newer musicals such as "West Side Story" tended to replace the older and now increasingly outdated musicals such as Romburg's "Desert Song," as both musical tastes and social concepts began to change in America.

The hurricanes of 1954 took down the canvas "big top" at the Cohasset theater. In late summer Hurricane "Carol" devastated coastal New England on a scale not seen since the 1938 hurricane, and the Cohasset tent finally victim to winds of well more than 100 miles per hour. The big tent didn't give way without a fight, however, as those of us in the company struggled to keep its edges taut and firmly attached to the ground. It was only after the supply of small wooden perimeter poles had been used up, and many broken in the process, that the vast canvas top began the uncontrollable shaking that tore its heavy canvas and laid waste to chairs near the tall "quarter poles." Those wooden poles, part way between the perimeter and the center, were picked up by the flapping canvas and their bottom ends flailed around, splintering most wooden chairs in their vicinity. The battle to save the tent against the ravages of nature finally was lost, but at almost the last minute, as the orchestra pit began to flood, an intrepid member of the company rushed in beneath the flailing canvas to gather up, and save, the orchestra's valuable musical instruments.

There was a "canvas man" at each tent theater, and Cohasset's canvas man was an elder veteran of Ringling Bros. Circus days. Several years earlier he had been working at the Hartford circus tent at the time of the tragic fire that claimed so many lives, but had been on his day off when that fire occurred. But there was no way the shredded canvas of the Cohasset tent could be repaired after "Carol's" 1954 visit. The show being performed on the week of the hurricane was the western "Paint Your Wagon" and its fine production run ended prematurely. Whatever damage hadn't been done by hurricane "Carol" was completed by hurricane "Edna" a week later, and the summer season was over for the Cohasset theater.

By the 1960s social change was in the air in America; the traditional musicals and operettas no longer were able to hold the attention of audiences in summer theaters. Within a few years a number of tent theaters across the country were not able to remain financially viable and disappeared . Cohasset's Music Circus, and its close relative in Hyannis, however, were able to make the transition to a more popular type of entertainment and have survived and flourished into the new century.

COHASSET CARES

Ready, get set, sort, recycle!

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

While walking over to Robbins Garage the other day to get my car (I'll give those fantastic guys, Cohasset's own Clicks and Clacks, a free pitch any day), I met a friend who asked me for advice about getting ready for Pay-As-You-Throw.

First, start now! Don't wait until July 1!

In your sorting, make careful note of how much non-recyclable stuff you generate in a week. Hopefully it shouldn't be too much if you've been conscientious all along. Items that are not recyclable that will end up in our $1 or $.50 bags we purchase are things like potato chip bags, celluloid packaging, cereal box liners, foam coffee cups.

We'll find we're going to be very conscious of packaging, and that's good, very good! One of our worst enemies will be styro foam, which is extremely bulky as well as non-recyclable.

Remember styro foam peanut-packing goes to Thompson's Business Services, 92 Front St., Scituate Harbor, across from Rockland Trust. No need for these things to fill up our precious bags (or to blow around the South Shore).

Crush the cardboard egg boxes (foam ones are not recyclable and will take up precious space) and put in our cardboard collection along with flattened tp cores.

Waxed containers (i.e. milk or oj) should be flattened and put in junk mail. Please sort the recyclables at home so as not to congest the works at the RTF.

PAYT will make us think twice about our lifestyles—about, for example, our use of foam coffee cups (non-recyclable and bulky) — and the other non-recyclable things. We will find we'll want to lobby for all recyclable containers, the way they operate in many other countries. Manufacturers need to be pressured! These are intense times for environmental concerns! And that's good!

See you next time.

Nesting season — time to study our breeding birds

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

May is coming to an end. June will soon begin. Migration is winding down. The breeding activities of building nests, laying eggs and raising young are beginning. Color codes on field guide maps usually refer to resident birds, winter visitors, and summer visitors. Summer visitors and resident birds are the ones to concentrate on now.

Breeding birds need a safe place to lay their eggs. Nests are receptacles for eggs and nestlings. Just as people choose different styles of homes to live in, birds build different types of nests to suit their needs. Large birds, such as hawks or herons, use platform nests built with large sticks. Herons nest in colonies, and in spite of being so large, put their nests in the tops of trees. Many herons nest on Sarah Island in Hingham Harbor. Grebes build a floating platform nest attached to underwater vegetation. Osprey may use actual platforms constructed to encourage more nesting, or navigational buoys or transformer towers near water, so they can easily find fish for food. Two good spots to view Osprey nests are on Fort Hill Street just before the Weymouth line, looking out over the Back River, and looking south from the bridge over the Weir River on Justice Cushing Highway.

Cup nests are the most common style of nests, used especially by songbirds. The basic shape is that of a cup or a bowl. Robins, catbirds, and cardinals all attach their nests firmly in the upright position on the crotch of a tree or on top of branches in thick vegetation. Orioles and vireos build a pendant-type cup, which they suspend from tree branches or twigs. The Eastern Phoebe and the Barn Swallow build their cup nests on building ledges or rafters. If a flat surface is used, the cup is round. If a vertical surface is used, mud attaches a semi-circular cup. Chimney Swifts use saliva to attach their nests to the inside wall of chimneys. Ovenbirds and Cliff Swallows create a dome-shaped cup with the hole on the side. The outside diameter of a hummingbird's nest is less than two inches.

Cavity nests are placed inside trees, birdhouses, burrows or anything with a hole for an entrance. Woodpeckers, titmice, chickadees, bluebirds, starlings and House Sparrows are all cavity nesters. As natural cavities become scarcer, birds find other types of cavities in man-made structures. Bank Swallows and Belted Kingfishers dig burrows in banks for their nests. Cornell Lab of Ornithology has been doing studies to discover which direction bluebird houses should face for the best success. There is some evidence that more young fledge from boxes facing eastward, at least in the northeast. Perhaps east-facing boxes warm up faster in the morning after cool nights and keep cooler in the afternoon. Orientation is not the only factor in nesting success, and more research needs to be done on this question.

The simplest type of nest is called a scrape and consists of nothing more than a very shallow depression. Some pelagic birds lay their eggs directly on a rocky ledge with no nesting material at all. Piping Plovers nest right on the sand and rely on camouflage to keep them safe. Killdeer use open fields, but as this habitat disappears will use flat roofs instead. They have been known to nest on top of Hingham High School.

Cup nests are the most common style of nests, used especially by songbirds.

The most widely used nesting materials are plant materials, including sticks, twigs, leaves, bark, moss, rootlets and grasses. Birds will also make use of animal and human hair, feathers and snakeskins. Hummingbirds use lichens and spider webs for waterproofing. Some birds have found that certain aromatic leaves help repel parasites. An amazing variety of man-made materials have been found in nests. These include cellophane, strips of clear plastic, paper clips, cigarette butts, colored yarn, and even paper money.

Finding bird nests is difficult, because birds are expert at hiding and camouflaging, a necessity for guarding against predators. If you hear a bird singing regularly from the same perch, this is a good clue that nest building is going on nearby. If you see a bird carrying nesting material, this is another good clue. Eventually you may see birds carrying food to their young or fecal sacs away from the nest. Even with all these clues, it is surprisingly difficult to locate the actual nest.

Have you ever wondered what goes on inside a nesting box or up high in an eagle's nest? There are a number of web sites featuring live pictures from nests via on-site cameras. Here are three URLs showing Peregrine Falcons, Bald Eagles and Eastern Bluebirds:

For more information about the nests of particular species, see the Peterson Field Guide, "Birds' Nests", by Hal H. Harrison, or "A Field Guide to the Nests, Eggs and Nestlings" by Colin Harrison. This last may be out of print, but there is a copy in the Old Colony Library System.

Bluebirds on World's End.

This time of year, there are always questions about what to do if you find a baby bird on the ground. The instinct is to pick it up and try to save it. Picking it up is not the problem. The old wives' tale that birds will reject any young that have been touched by humans is not true. The problem is that it is very difficult for humans to raise birds successfully. The best thing to do if you find a baby bird is to leave it there, or put it under a bush out of the way of children or cats or dogs. Most times the parents are actually nearby listening for the call of their offspring, which go through an awkward stage between getting out of the nest and being able to fly. If you are thoroughly convinced that the parents have been killed or incapacitated in some way, please call the New England Wildlife Center at 781-749-5387.

HEALTH NOTES

Threats to health from the home environment: Mercury

By S. N. Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

How many of us as kids covered a dime with the mercury from a broken thermometer? The shiny metal was a fascinating toy, and we innocently played with a highly dangerous pollutant which has now become a major problem.

Mercury is everywhere. There are a few ounces of mercury in practically every room in your house. We know it's in thermometers , but most major appliances including computers and TV sets contain mercury, as well as fluorescent lights, mercury switches in furnace and air conditioning controls, cars, and a majority of batteries of all types. The problem is that mercury from these products ends up in landfills and incinerators allowing it to re-enter and contaminate the food chain, and pollute our drinking water.

Mercury is a particular problem of modern high consumption society where conservation receives insufficient emphasis. The situation is similar to ancient Rome when lead was used as a wine preservative. There is evidence that lead poisoning widely affected affluent citizens in roman society because of the vast amounts of lead tainted wine consumed.

Increasing coverage by the press emphasizes the need to reduce the amount of mercury entering the environment. This is because mercury is a persistent and toxic heavy metal that can move quickly through the food chain. It attacks the nervous system, and is particularly dangerous to pregnant women because it causes damage to the central nervous system of the fetus. Our place at the top of the food chain increases the likelihood that we may become the ultimate collection and storage point for mercury released to the environment. State and federal sampling efforts have already determined that much of the freshwater fish in New England contain potentially harmful levels of mercury. These findings are consistent with similar findings noted throughout the nation. In fact, the Massachusetts Department of Public Health, noting their results from their sampling program, has issued advisories that fish in virtually every body of fresh water in the Commonwealth contain sufficient mercury to be harmful to fetuses of pregnant women and should not be eaten. Subsistence fishermen and those who eat large amounts of freshwater fish are also susceptible to mercury poisoning. Exposure to harmful concentrations of mercury can also result in brain and kidney damage or birth defects. There is also considerable evidence of a link between mercury poisoning and autism, since the symptoms are similar.

Mercury promises to become a major environmental problem of the next decade. The National Academy of Sciences, in a report released last year estimated that 60,000 children are born annually with dangerous levels of mercury. Experts agree this figure will rise.

What can be done? At the last town meeting, John McNabb submitted, and the town passed, a bylaw, based on a Boston statute, banning sale of mercury thermometers. This beginning has been followed up by the creation of a mercury shed at the Recycling Transfer Facility (RTF), where mercury containing products can be turned in. The Board of Health is planning a thermometer exchange, and has a listing of mercury containing items in the home. You can help by recognizing the danger from mercury and if you have a spill, contact the Board of Health. Spill containment is important and there are procedures for cleanup after a mercury spill. It is most important to get rid of all the mercury, since it gives off a toxic vapor as long as a few micrograms exist. The Board of Health has a spill kit and instructions for cleanup. To learn more about what you can do, contact the Board of Health. To learn more about symptoms of mercury or lead poisoning, contact Judy Fitzsimmons, the Town Nurse at the Town Hall.

What's Next? The Town of Burlington, Mass. has become the focus for a program involving local efforts to inform the public, initiate a program of reduction of the use of mercury and promote its effective disposal. The next step will be proposal for a regulation governing the inspection and disposal of construction wastes for mercury containing substances, required as a condition for a building permit. Mercury is a useful metal, but we must be very careful in using it.

(Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health)

Get that bigamist!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I see that Tom Green, an unreconstructed Mormon who lives in a trailer compound in the Utah desert with his five wives and 25 children, has been convicted of bigamy and could get up to 25 years in the slam and $25,000 in fines.

Good Lord! Five wives and 25 children! Hasn't the man suffered enough?

In the course of following Tom's trial in the newspapers, I was surprised to learn that there are some 20,000 people living in what some people call a "polygamous relationship" in the state of Utah. The old fuddy duddies amongst us still call it "living in sin."

The difference between Tom and the 19,999 others is that he went before the television cameras to tell Jerry Springer all about his illegal ménage a six, which is a little like Whitey Bulger putting his address on the Internet and telling the FBI to "come and get me."

This forced the usually tolerant Utah officials to take judicial notice of Tom since Salt Lake City is fixing to host the 2002 Winter Olympics and we wouldn't want the Arabs, the Russians and the Chinese to think we have a hole in our moral defenses, now, would we?

One would think that Tom's five wives (a "head" wife and four "sister" wives) would be pleased to be rid of their male oppressor. But, no! The wives I saw on TV wept openly over the loss of their breadwinner, who supported them by selling magazine subscriptions and collecting welfare.

Plural marriage, or polygamy, was part of the Mormon religion almost since its founding in the mid-19th century. One of its early leaders, the charismatic Brigham Young, was said to have had somewhere between 19 and 27 wives and enough children to have a university named for him.

(He's the tired-looking one with the bags under his eyes in the yearbook picture.)

Incidentally, according to the Guinness Book of World Records, the record for bigamous marriages is held by one Giovanni Vigliotto who tied the knot 104 times before he was caught and sentenced to 28 years for fraud and bigamy in 1983. He died in 1991, presumably with a smile on his face.

But I digress . . .

It may have been God's law in Utah in 1850 but it was people who vetoed it in 1890 when it became apparent that those old spoilsports in Washington were not going to listen to their pleadings and admit Utah as a state unless Mormon men limited themselves to one woman at a time.

Now, with the 2002 Winter Olympics staring them in the pocketbook, Utahans (or whatever they call them) appear ready to go after those who have been happily defying the 1890 law for lo these many years.

In the words of Douglas White, an attorney for an anti-polygamy group: "The precedent has been set, and I'm here to tell you this thing is not going to go away. There are a lot of prosecutors in this state who have watched this. Now they've been shown how it's done."

Surviving spring allergy season

Sneezing, itchy eyes, mouth and throat, and irritated swelling skin are just some of the many symptoms more than 40 million people suffer from every year due to allergies. Although pinpointing the source of allergies may be difficult, the symptoms are common. Many over-the-counter and prescription drugs are available to prevent the onset or treat the symptoms of allergies (check with your doctor before taking any new medication). Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts' (BCBSMA) Prevention and Wellness Program provides tips to assist you with allergy management.

An allergy is an abnormal sensitivity to substances called allergens. Some people are born with allergies, while others may develop allergies through daily contact with the allergen.

Some allergens are:

•Tree pollen, weeds, and grass.
•Dust mites.
•Animal dander. Dander is the protein in an animal's saliva, and it contains dead skin flakes. For many years, people believed they were allergic to an animal's hair or fur, but the saliva stimulates the allergic reaction.
•Stinging insects such as bees, wasps, yellow jackets, hornets, and fire ants.
•Ingredients in cosmetics, latex, food, dairy product, medication, etc.

Call your doctor if you experience any of the symptoms listed below:

Rapidly developing skin welts (They give the appearance of swollen lines on the skin.) accompanied by redness of the skin, severe itching, and irritated skin.

Severe stomach cramps, bloating, vomiting, or diarrhea. This could be food poisoning or an allergic reaction.

Sneezing, constant runny nose, coughing, itchy, watery eyes, mouth and throat.

Stiffness, pain, and swelling of the joints.

There are several ways you can reduce exposure to allergens:

•Use a HEPA (high efficiency,particulate air filter) to clean the air.
•Keep windows closed and use an air-conditioner instead of a fan.
•Wash curtains often to eliminate dust.
•Wash bed linen in hot water every week.
•Vacuum your carpet every week.
•Minimize clutter, as they are dust catchers.

These suggestions were adapted from the Asthma and Allergy Foundation of America (AAFA). For more information, please call AAFA at 1 (800) 727-8462 or visit their web site at http://www.aafa.org

Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Massachusetts' Prevention and Wellness Program started in 1995 with a series of initiatives designed to promote preventive health care to more than 2.4 million members. To learn more about the program, please call 1 (800) 262-BLUE.

Citizens' group won't support Greenbush report

argument it makes.

"The secretary takes public comments very seriously. These people have given a lot of time, a number of years in many cases to look at this project," he said. "There are literally thousands of public comments on a project of this size, and all will be considered."

The current CAC was formed in December, as called for under the regulations of the Massachusetts Environmental Policy Act to review the impact report. Durand had originally given the CAC a deadline of early this spring to finish the review, but granted a deadline extension of May 21.

The state filed the initial impact report on Greenbush in 1990, and then a supplemental report in 1994 after it was separated out from the Middleboro and Plymouth branches of the Old Colony line, of which Greenbush is the third and final leg.

In 1995, then-Secretary of Environmental Affairs Trudy Coxe ruled the impact report to be adequate, but listed a number of issues on which "analysis needs to be developed to a higher level of detail in the final EIR," such as project costs, alternatives, ridership projections, impact on air quality, wetlands and waterways, historic resources and grade-crossing safety.

These issues were the ones committee members have looked over in particular the past few months. After reviewing a draft of the final impact report, the majority opinion's report said "we would be derelict in our duty under the law if we were to find the draft environmental impact report adequate at the present time."

The 20-page opinion questioned the validity of the MBTA's ridership projections, analysis of alternatives, air quality studies, safety claims, noise and vibration mitigation plans, and local traffic impact.

It also criticized the MBTA's claim that the project is necessary to "help insure that an even larger workforce is capable of reaching Downtown Boston, in order to insure the health of the inner core business district."

The opinion said "the MBTA's apparent assumption is that the interests of Downtown Boston are paramount," to those of South Shore residents, and that the MBTA "makes this argument at a time when South Shore cities like Quincy and Brockton are having a difficult time keeping their downtown business areas alive."

It also criticized the MBTA for failing to conduct additional studies on the dangers of diesel exhaust on local communities, especially abutters. "This omission is unacceptable in an environmental impact report in light of the fact that several independent bodies have found in the last several years that such diesel exhausts are carcinogens or potential carcinogens."

The opinion also said the MBTA needs to reassess the noise impact the train has on abutting properties, the benefits of wooden railroad ties and rubber vibration mats, traffic impact on local roads, and property values along the line.

But the minority opinion said the impact report is adequate and suggested that some who signed the majority report would never declare it "adequate."

"We believe that the debate has been strong in questioning and probing for answers," the minority report says. "There will be some people who do not believe the answers have been sufficient. There will be some people who will never accept the answers, even if they have been given to the best of the ability of the MBTA and their consultant."

It continued, "Some might say the MBTA has not adequately addressed any of the environmental issues it must solve in order to construct this project. We do not believe this."

The report said the MBTA has worked "above and beyond" what is required in the mandated areas. It said no problem raised can't be solved, and urged Durand to approve the impact report.

Gruber, who was instrumental in Cohasset recently signing a multi-million dollar mitigation deal, denied the contention that the inadequacy ruling is another attempt to stall the $408 million project.

"It's not just an attempt to stop the train. I believe there needs to be more work done," he said. "If there is anyone trying to obstruct the train, it's a minority of people. I don't believe anyone that signed either report had a strong agenda."

The MBTA formally filed its final environmental impact report Tuesday. The public has until Aug. 10 to submit comments.

Pizzi said it would be inappropriate to comment on the CAC opinion at this time.

He said anyone interested in submitting a comment can address it to Secretary of Environmental Affairs Robert Durand, MEPA Office, EOEA 5840, Janet Hutchins, 251 Causeway Street Suite 900, Boston, MA 02114.

Relay for Life hits the mark

By 4 p.m., little tent cities were sprouting up across the field, and scores of people walked the first of many laps around the track.

The event started off on a high note. According to event co-chair Gordon Behrer, the relay opened with $50,000 in donations already turned in, thousands of dollars higher than last year at the same time. He called it "a good sign" of things to come.

Laurie Greenip captained "Leanne's Team" in support of a friend battling breast cancer. Greenip had recruited 48 people to join the team, and raised $8,000 to help her friend since nursery school.

"I've called a lot of people, my friends, her friends, family," said Greenip, 33. "It seemed like something I had to do to support her."

She said 90 percent of her team was made up by young mothers, like herself, who were moved by their friend's fight. "It really makes you go, 'wow.'"

Ann Marie Goff, a cancer survivor, organized a team in memory of Clark Chatterton, the person responsible for bringing the relay to Cohasset four years ago.

Chatterton lost his two-year battle with cancer weeks after last year's event. "Clark's Energizers" were 40-people strong this year and met Goff's goal of $6,000, pleasing Chatterton's widow, Sallyanne.

"She's worked so, so hard," Chatterton said about Goff's efforts. "Organizing a team is hard work."

Clark Chatterton was remembered on a larger scale later Friday evening during the lighting of the luminaria. Participants bought enough of the memorial candles to line the entire circumference of the track, and parts of the other side as well.

A member of Chatterton's family, as well as the family of Paul Kelly, who captained the Hingham Middle School team until he too lost his fight with cancer last year, led every participant in a solemn, tolling-bell accompanied lap around the track.

"It was a very emotional ceremony," Bleicken said.

"It was pretty quiet the entire way around," added Victor Vanderlugt, another co-chairman of the event.

Bleicken said the event raised another $1,400 from the Taste of the Relay, where participants could try samplings from a dozen local restaurants set up in the Sullivan Gymnasium.

"The taste was a huge hit," said Bleicken, who gave credit to Jeff Mushin for coordinating the restaurants. "There was shrimp, lobster, everything. I can't say how much we thank the restaurants."

The rain held off overnight, and bright sunshine ruled Saturday's portion of the event. The relay came to a close 21-hours after it started with a final lap around the track led by the Rusty Skippers Marching Band.

Vanderlugt remarked how close everyone at the event seemed. "I think there was a lot of camaraderie between the people. Everyone became one big group."

Special team awards were presented including Best Decorated Campsite which was awarded to "The Beach Bums," led by Cindy Whelan, of Hull, and Most Team Spirit was awarded to "Karen's Team," led by Bob Clifford, of Hingham.

Cohasset honored in No Place for Hate event

The New England office of the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) announced that it will officially certify 15 cities and towns as the first ever No Place for Hate (NPFH) communities, in a ceremony May 30, at 4 p.m., at the headquarters of Blue Cross Blue Shield in Boston.

This prestigious designation will be bestowed upon communities that have made the commitment to building understanding and respect for diversity in their communities, while engaging residents in at least three new programs created to facilitate inter-group dialogue and inhibit tensions and hate crimes.

The 15 cities and towns to reach certification are among the 53 Massachusetts communities currently participating in this statewide campaign.

Attorney General Tom Reilly will join the ADL at a ceremony hosted by NPFH program sponsor, Blue Cross Blue Shield of Massachusetts (BCBSMA). Communities that will be honored include Cohasset, Duxbury, Franklin, Hull, Lexington, Melrose, Monson, Natick, Needham, New Bedford, Newburyport, Northampton, Peabody, Sharon, Somerville and Swampscott.

Also joining in the certification ceremony are program underwriter, The Maxwell V. Blum Family; supporter, Shaw's Supermarkets, Inc; and partner, Massachusetts Municipal Association. Municipal representatives will be awarded a sign for the "entrance" to the city/town, stating that "This is a No Place for Hate community in the year 200 1."

New England ADL Executive Director, Robert Leikind said, "By taking part in this program, communities are setting a standard for how to go about establishing respectful communities that are dedicated to democratic values." Leikind added, "We are thrilled to certify the first 15 communities, and look forward to working with each of them as they advance the goals of the No Place for Hate campaign."

No Place for Hate co-chairs, Beth and Gerry Tishler, look forward to the May 30 certification ceremony, and commented "The enthusiasm over the success of this campaign has been tremendous. We are delighted to have the opportunity to publicly recognize these communities, who have committed themselves to creating inclusive environments that can truly be designated as No Place for Hate."

In addition to the communities being certified, 11 participating communities will be awarded No Place for Hate matching grant funding, through the support of BCBSMA. Grant recipients include Natick, New Bedford, Newburyport, Lexington, Bedford, Cohasset, Duxbury, Quincy, Amherst, Malden and Sudbury.

Who is George Mealy?

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

George H. Mealy

The Cohasset American Legion post was named after the first Cohasset man killed in World War I, George H. Mealy of Beechwood Street.

Sergeant George Henry Mealy, of Company K, 101st Infantry, Yankee Division, was mortally wounded on July 17, 1918 in Fismes, France during the battle of Chateau-Thierry. He was buried at a grave site in Belleau Wood in France.

He was born Nov. 10, 1889 in Cohasset to George W. Mealy and Charlotte Otis (Snow) Mealy, according to "Cohasset Genealogies and Town History."

His family had a successful ice business, which delivered giant blocks of ice to the residents of Cohasset.

Mealy joined the Army and fought in the successful Mexican Border campaign of 1916.

In September of 1931, Legion Commander Nathaniel Hurwitz, Joseph Barrow, Frank Migliaccio and the Pond Plain Band of Weymouth journeyed over to France to visit the grave sit of Mealy and Corporal Lawrence B. Williams, who was also killed in action. The group placed wreaths as well as Cohasset earth over the graves.

Three other Cohasset natives were killed in World War I: Private Herman E. Daley, Private John W. Sidney, and Private Joseph A Gonsalves.

House puts money back into Chapter 70 aid

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The state House of Representatives voted to add $18 million to their Chapter 70 school aid budget last week, after coming under heavy fire for sacrificing suburban money to increase aid to urban school districts.

The increase, said state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, brings Chapter 70 money up to at least what is proposed in the governor's budget.

Cohasset was one of 160 Massachusetts communities which would have received more money under the governor's proposed budget, rather than the original House budget.

Although Cohasset was slated to see a $62,000 increase in Chapter 70 aid in the House budget, the amount was $44,000 less than what was earmarked in the governor's budget for the town.

It's the governor's numbers that Town Manager Mark Haddad and Finance Director Michael Buckley base the town budget on, as do most other communities, because they are the first numbers to be released, and traditionally are the lowest.

The town budget was passed at the annual Town Meeting in March. Haddad had said that if the House numbers passed, and Cohasset saw a deficit in state aid revenues, the town would have to revisit and rebalance the town budget.

"It was not fair of the House to do that without any warning," Bradley said of the House's original low aid numbers. "The towns have already had their Town Meetings, using the governor's figures, and for them to come back [with lower numbers] wasn't fair."

— State Rep. Garrett Bradley

But Bradley, and a number of other legislators sponsored an amendment to increase the amount of funding that guaranteed Cohasset will receive at least $1,434,077 in state aid for Cohasset schools.

"It was not fair of the House to do that without any warning," Bradley said of the House's original low aid numbers. "The towns have already had their Town Meetings, using the governor's figures, and for them to come back [with lower numbers] wasn't fair."

Haddad said he was "very happy" at the legislature's new vote. "I think that's great they're going to do it at the governor's level. That's what we expected, that's what the department of revenue had sent out [to base state aid revenue projections on], and I'm glad the legislature did the right thing."

Bradley said the legislature was also able to secure $7.5 million for raises for school nurses. The House originally was going to take the money out of the state's tobacco settlement money to pay for the raises, but Bradley and others fought to use the $7.5 million for tobacco education programs and fund the school nurses through the general fund.

He also managed to secure $280,000 for a state police holding room on Nantasket Beach, despite going against the House leadership in his vote to include funding for the Clean Elections Law in the budget.

Before being consolidated into the state police, the Metropolitan District Commission police which used to patrol the beach had a station right on the main street. However, the station has since been closed, and state police now take suspects to the Norwell barracks, resulting in increased overtime costs.

Bradley said by opening a small holding room, state police will be able to come and pick up the suspect, and allow the Nantasket patrol to stay on the streets.

He said the money was approved despite "immense pressure" placed on him by House leadership to change his vote on Clean Elections Law funding.

Bradley said he met with House Speaker Thomas Finneran and told him his intentions.

"I told him I disagreed with him, and he said he disagreed with me, and I said I wouldn't be voting with him," Bradley said.

The House voted to fund the law through a check-off box on the state income tax forms, rather than a separate line item in the budget.

The day after the vote, House Majority Whip Sal DiMasi, D-Boston, proposed an amendment that would have cut money for projects in districts represented by freshmen legislators who voted against the leadership. Bradley was not one of those freshmen representatives targeted.

"I don't know why I wasn't," he said. "Maybe it was because I let people know where I stood before the vote."

The senate has yet to finalize its budget, but expects to do so in the next couple of weeks. Once both branches have passed their budgets, a joint committee will iron out the differences.

Memorial Day cookout May 28

The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation invites everyone for hamburgers, hot dogs, soft drinks or coffee immediately following the Memorial Day parade on May 28, at Bancroft Hall on Government Island.

The non-profit Lightkeepers Corporation was established in 1991 to renovate a former two-family lightkeepers' residence, no longer used as such because of automation of Minot Light, and convert it into a function room for community use. The building is maintained and operated by the CLC.

The generosity of Cohasset residents and others provided the funds for renovation. Operating and maintenance expenses, and reserves for capital replacements and improvements, are recovered from rental of two apartments on the second floor, and from fees charged to non-residents for use of the function room facilities. Cohasset residents may use the facilities for a nominal fee, and non-profit organizations at no charge..

This will be the fifth year that CLC has hosted Memorial Day attendees in recognition of the generosity of our supporters, and we expect to serve about 1000 people again.

DAR chapter elects officers

The Old Colony Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, held its annual meeting to elect officers. The meeting was a brunch held at the South Shore Country Club. Barbara Dillon and Annette Sechen were unanimously elected regent and vice regent respectively.

Officers who had recently been elected retained their positions, Treasurer Nancy Snowdale, Corresponding Secretary Claire Tinory, Registrar Ann Pompeo and Chaplin Roberta Krause, who led the dozens of members in the ritual opening prayer and also a memory service for Patricia Fitzmaurice.

Each DAR meeting the regent states the purpose of the Daughters which is to perpetuate the memory and spirit of the men and women who achieved American independence; to promote the development of an enlightened public opinion, and to foster patriotic citizenship. These are the objects of the society, Daughters of the American Revolution.

The American's creed is also recited. It goes, : "I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people by the people whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic: A Sovereign Nation of many Sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

Barbara Dillon, newly elected regent, Nancy O'Tool, who completed five years as regent and swore in the new regents, and Annette Sechen, new vice regent.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it; support its constitution; to obey its laws; to respect its flag; and to defend it against all enemies."

The new regents Barbara Dillon and Annette Sechen will hold a meeting to outline the programs for the coming year which will begin in the fall. One of the meetings will be to help more than 25 prospective members trace their ancestry to a relative who participated in some way in the American Revolution.

For more information or to join the DAR call Barbara Dillon at 781-383-0025 or Nancy O'Toole, 781-383-1547.

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello to all of you reading our School's In column. It is amazing to me to think that we only have a few weeks left of school for this year. I for one cannot wait. Summer is always such a great time to enjoy around here with the kids but it always seems to go way too fast.

We don't have a lot to talk about in this week's column, mostly about some upcoming dates and events. At the Joseph Osgood School, Snapper Sneaker Day is being held on Friday, June 8 with Monday, June 11, the rain date if needed. Wednesday, June 20 is the last full day of kindergarten and report cards will be sent home as well. June 21 is Move-Up day with the last day on Friday, June 22.

At the Deer Hill School, the Grade 6 Olympic Day will be held on Tuesday, June 19 with a rain date of June 20. Friday, June 22 at 10 a.m. is the Grade 6 Promotion Ceremony.

The Grade 6 Promotion Luncheon will be held at Atlantica from noon-3 p.m. on Friday, June 22. Tickets are $12.95 for adults and $9.50 for children. Call Julie Trendowicz at 383-3051 or Pearl Smith at 383-6953 with questions.

If anyone out there has any used lacrosse equipment to donate, here is a great cause to send it to. Scott Hill, a sophomore at Duxbury High School will travel to South Dakota to run a camp under the auspices of the YMCA for the Sioux children, and he will be teaching them lacrosse. Scott will pick up any equipment that you are willing to donate. Call him at 781-585-5455.

The Grade 4 family night has been scheduled for Thursday, June 14 from 6-8:30 p.m. Any questions call Kelly Gaumer at 383-6343.

The Grade 6 night is being held on Friday, June 15 from 7-9:30 p.m. at the Teen Garage. Ideas and volunteers are needed so call Susan Wilcox at 383-1998 to find out more.

The Cohasset Pre-Prom party is being held on Friday, June 1 from 5-7 p.m. at the Light keepers House. This is a wonderful way for the town to come out and see our beautiful prom-goers and have the photographer snap some great portraits of the kids. There will not be a photographer at the prom itself so parents, make sure to grab your checkbook and come to this terrific pre-prom event.

The Cohasset Parents Advisory Council is having its Award Ceremony and a message from Steve Kaplan, Director Of Student Services on Wednesday, June 6 in the Osgood Music Room at 7:30 p.m. All are welcome.

That is all for this week. The last School's In column for the year will be ready for the June 14 edition! Make sure to get all of your news to me at:

Showdown with Norwell caps memorable season for C.H.S. tennis teams

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

The best players come out and play their best against the best competition.

On Monday, the Cohasset High boys and girls tennis teams both played the toughest competition in the South Shore League in Norwell, and both definitely had showings that they were proud of.

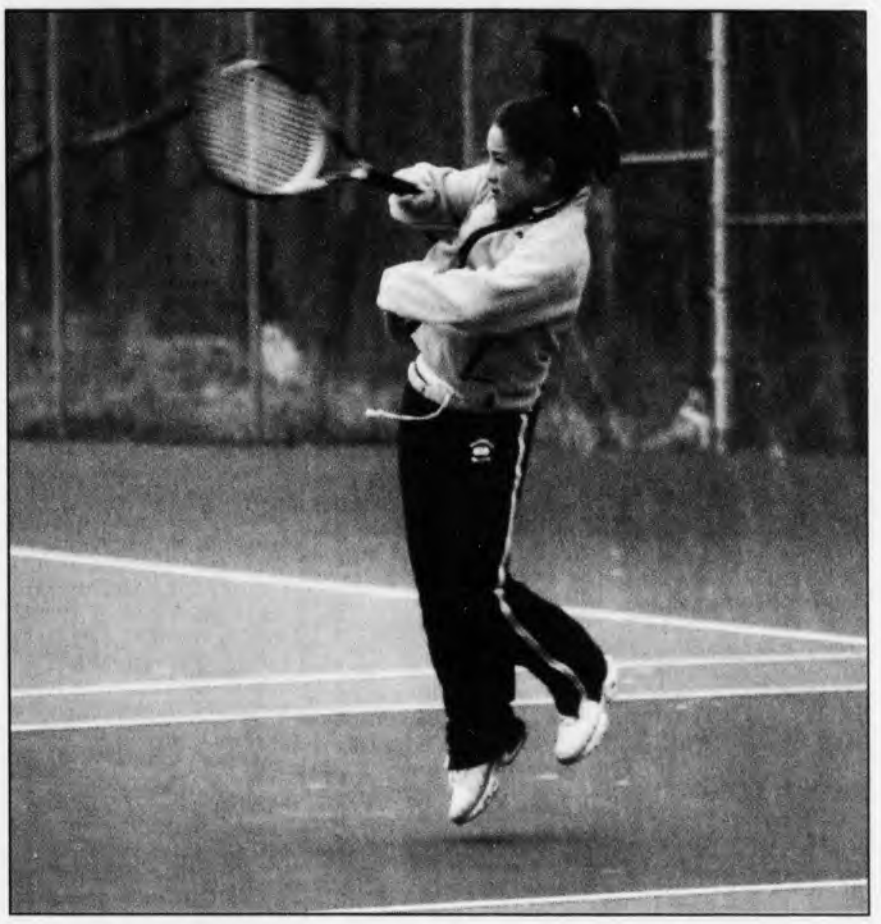
Girls win, 3-2
Boys lose 3-2

After losing 3-2 to the Lady Clippers at home earlier this year, the Cohasset girls clinched at least a share of the League title for the seventh consecutive year with a thrilling 3-2 win.

The Cohasset girls improved their record to 10-1 with their win over Norwell, and it was about as close as a team match can get.

Sophomore All-Star Julie Shea, bouncing off her first loss of the year last week against Abington, "decimated" (according to tenth year coach Sarah Meehan) her opponent in under thirty minutes, 6-2, 6-0.

However, Norwell came back and tied the score with a 6-2, 7-5 win at first doubles over senior Ary Afshar and freshman Emily Sullivan. And just to make Cohasset fans even more nervous, all three of the other matches going on had Cohasset losing its first set.



Norwell's standout Angie Bizzozzero defeated Holly Graham at third singles, 6-1, 6-4, to put the home team in the lead, 2-1. As both of these very tough competitors are only freshmen, with sophomores as their teams number one, this could be quite a rivalry down the road (according to coach Meehan).

Junior Kelly Stone and freshman Courtney Caron, fresh off their great turn out at the Hingham tournament, bounced back from a 4-6 loss in the first set to win the next two 6-3, 6-4.

All eyes then turned to the two best players in the league, All-Star sophomores Lindsay Grossman (undefeated) and Sarah Bitetti (only loss this year was to Grossman). Bitetti had stepped up her game to take the first set 6-2.

"She wanted a piece of Lindsay," said Meehan. "Lindsay had to make Cohasset freshman Courtney Caron (pictured here) teamed with partner Kelly Stone, a junior, to take a huge three set win over Norwell's first doubles team (4-6, 6-3, 6-4.) on Monday to help the Lady Skippers to a 3-2 win that pushed them into a South Shore League co-championship for the seventh straight season.

Girls lacrosse team improves to 7-5-1, moves to within one won of tourney berth

The Cohasset girls varsity lacrosse team improved their record to 7-5-1 over the past week, keeping their chance to make the state tournament very much alive. After suffering a tough 10-9 loss on the road against Falmouth, the Lady Skippers bounced back with solid victories at home against Barnstable Thursday night and Monday afternoon at Marshfield.

Falmouth 10 - Cohasset 9

Two evenly matched teams squared off last Tuesday in an important game for state tournament pairings. Cohasset and Falmouth traded goals for much of the first half but Falmouth pulled out to a three goal lead midway through the second half.

Cohasset mounted a furious comeback led by junior co-captain Kristin Sheerin (4 goals and 1 assist) and Maura McKenney (4 goals) but fell one goal short. Suzanne Lynner had the Skippers' only other tally. Once again, Gia Petrakis in goal (11 saves) and Julie Lordan, with numerous ground ball pickups, led the Cohasset defense.

Baseball team falls short in tourney bid

Tough luck loss to Hanover ends post-season hopes for boys in blue

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

It has been a season of tough breaks for the Cohasset baseball team, Which fell two games under .500 early in the season and never recovered. And with their loss to Hanover this past Monday, their record fell to 6-11, making it impossible to reach the post-season.

"This will be a season of what-ifs," reported third year coach Robert Knurek.

To be more specific, the "what-ifs" to which Knurek refers are the two losses his team suffered in the bottom of the seventh, the four games they lost by two runs, and the more than 35 unearned runs given up by the team this year.

Monday's 5-4 loss to Hanover was one of the two aforementioned back breakers., with the Skippers having carried a 4-3 lead into the seventh.

Sophomore second baseman Mike Snowdale, who has outperformed all expectations this year as a rookie for the varsity club, started the scoring for Cohasset with a solo home run.

"Snowdale has improved a ton," lauded Knurek, who has a mixture of veterans and rookies. "We had some senior leaders, but we also have a couple of freshmen and sophomores who have been playing great."

Though the home run got Cohasset on the board, the Skippers still trailed by two after they allowed starter Tim Straughn to be reached for three unearned runs in the third.

Although Straughn was tagged with the loss in this one, he continues to be the staff's steadiest pitcher. Unfortunately, he consistently fallen victim to erratic defense.

"If you said one weakness of ours, that would be it: consistency in the field," admitted Knurek.

In the seventh, with the Skippers leading, the Indians scratched a run across, thanks in part to an error. The winning play came on a suicide squeeze, done with one out and runners on second and third.

This depressing tilt reminded many of the game in Abington a few

Cohasset High's O'Brien has thrived in shadows

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

They are the Three Muskateers of the Cohasset High sports scene, if you will: Erik Shea, TJ Bilodeau and Doug O'Brien.

Indeed, its kind of neat to see these three regularly tooling around town in Erik's red Saab, realizing that they're as inseparable away from the athletic arenas as they are on them and in the minds of all who have closely followed C.H.S athletics over the course of the 2000-'01 school year.

And what a phenomenal nine months it has been, at least athletically, for "the little school that could," with these three seniors at the forefront.

Shea and O'Brien captained the soccer team that made it to the semi-finals in the Div. 3 Southeast Sectional, both earning all-league honors for their superior efforts.

This past winter, Shea, O'Brien and Bilodeau tri-captained the basketball team that shocked everyone by going 14-8 and making it to the second round of the state tourney. This time it was Bilodeau and Shea who earned the all-league honors.

The baseball team hasn't fared quite so well, getting knocked from post-season consideration on Monday with a heartbreaking 5-4 loss to Hanover. But Bilodeau and O'Brien led them proudly as captains and atop the batting order, both hitting in the high .300s and playing rock-solid defense at shortstop and centerfield, respectively. Shea also made his mark, taking his first spring away from club soccer in several years so that he could play for Cohasset High's tennis team. He wound up earning the number one singles spot for much of season and played a big hand in the team earning its first tourney berth in several years.

Although the three are inseparable in many people's minds, it has somehow turned out that Shea and Bilodeau have received the lion's share of accolades and headlines.

In a way, this is understandable.

Shea is the most natural athlete of the trio. He's also an elite soccer talent, playing year-round for the Crusaders, the cream of the crop

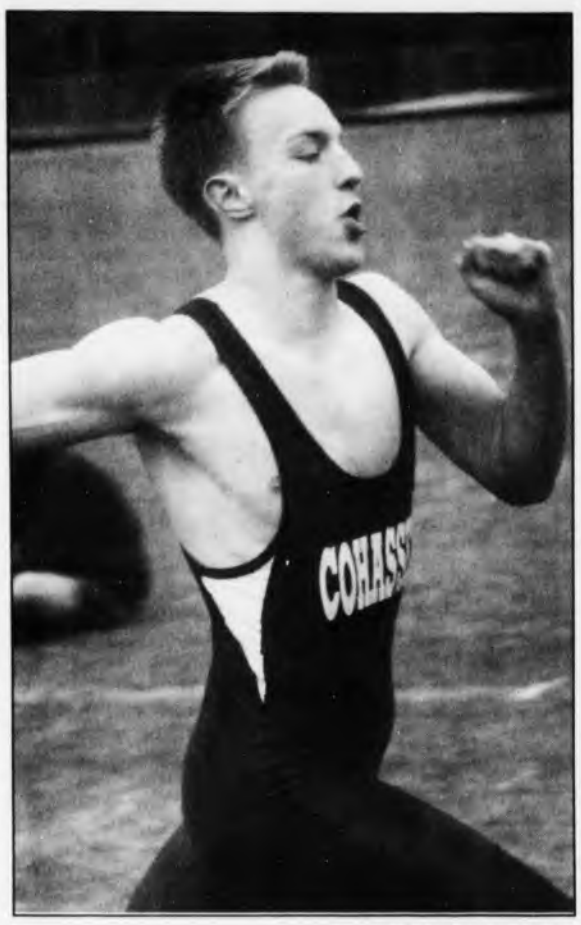
Golf team earns first tourney berth in 20 years

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Things got pretty exciting on the Cohasset Golf club links a few weeks back when the high school golf team won its first match in recent memory.

So, needless to say, thrill levels went off the charts last Thursday when the team won its fifth match of the season to qualify for its first tourney in nearly 20 years.

"We're all pretty pumped about this," reported first year head coach Torin Sweeney, following the team's 6.5-2.5 win over league rival Carver in Thursday's regular season finale. The win gave the Cohasset High squad a 5-5-1 record on the season.



With the match on the line at 3.5-2.5, Cohasset's numbers five and six golfers— Rob Lehr and Will Moody—came up huge to close out the tourney clinching match, capturing all three of the available points. Lehr shot a 45 and Moody a 53 to beat out their Carver counterparts, and the duo also won the best ball competition.

Numbers two and three golfers, Jay Bertovich and Dave Bouchard, also notched big points with rounds of 45 and 44, respectively.

Cohasset's number one golfer, Wil Prendergast shot a team best 43 for the day, but he lost by one stroke to Norton's Chris Petel.

Golf Notes

Today, May 24th, Sweeney will take his top three golfers — Prendergast, Bertovich and senior Ted Gledhill — to Squirrel Run in Plymouth (Carver's home course) for the South Shore League Meet.

O'Brien, Martin and Maitland lead strong Cohasset showing at Principals' Meet

THE EXTRA MILE

WITH JOE REARDON

May the wind always be at Jane Thies's back, at least on meet day. The Scituate High senior trackster, along with the rest of the triple jumpers, had a favorable wind at Saturday's South Shore Principals Meet at Norwell High, but even a friendly zephyr can't fully explain what was truly a magical day for Thies.

Thies not only broke her personal best of 34 feet, 2 inches in the triple jump once, she bettered the mark on five of her six jumps to take home the win at 35-1-1/2.Thies was looking ahead to the Pilgrim League meet and this Saturday's Class D championships, which will be held at Norwell.

Thies insists she didn't know what got into her, but believes it was a day where all the right conditions came together at a time when she is near a spring peak. Thies also finished in a second-place tie in the long jump at 5 feet. While waiting for her long jump medal, she said the meet was, without a doubt, her best ever.

Teammate Aquila Judge also set a personal best on her way to a long jump/hurdles, double-victory outing. Judge soared 18-2-1/2 to win the long jump, bettering her previous mark of 17-11. In the 100 hurdles, Thies bumped her knee just past 50 meters, but easily won the final.

Silver Lake's Daviann Brown easily defended her 400-meter title and wiped out a long-standing meet record in the process. Brown's time of 57.78 seconds was just under the 57.8 Norwell's Pam Connell posted back in 1984. Brown, second in the 400 at the All-State Championships last spring in a personal best of 57.4, was on her way to breaking her p.r. before slowing over the final 100 meters, the race already long-since decided.

Brown anchored the Lakers' 4:08.07 win in the 4x400 relay, which featured the young team of freshmen Michelle Woodford and Morgan Blanchard, and junior Meghan Dart. The Lakers were an easy winner over Brockton and came within three seconds of the Silver Lake record.

Mike Piche missed most of the outdoor season with a knee injury and has only started racing again recently. He looked as though he hadn't missed a beat after dominating the mile field with a winning time of 4:31.76. Teammate Matt Vercollone was equally dominant in the 2 mile, running uncontested to the finish in 9:53.76. Hingham High's Allison Donovan took the 2 mile in 11:39.21 to break the record held by Laura Hutchinson of Falmouth by less than a second.

Hanover's Joe Richardi captured the 100 hurdles in 16.14 and Cohasset's Robin Cunningham was second with a time of 16.90. Silver Lake's Pat Saccone also broke into the top six with his 17.19. Notre Dame's Kourtney Trainor rebounded well from a fall at the Coaches Invitational to win the 300 hurdles with a time of 46.85.

"She wanted to prove something to herself," said Aces head coach Rick Kates. "She's a pretty tough kid."

Melissa Murphy of Rockland rocketed out of the starting blocks and never looked back in her 100 win. Murphy finished with a time of 12.89. Notre Dame's Suzanne Timmons was fifth in 13.30. In the high jump, Rockland's Matt Boyd and Cohasset's Liam Martin both cleared 6 feet to take second and third, respectively. Tom McSharry of Abington was sixth with his 5-10 leap. David Davenport of Silver Lake long jumped 20-11-1/2 for second and Chris Cummings of Hanover was 10 inches back in third.

Pat Saccone claimed the discus title with his 144-8 throw. John Lannon of Scituate was sixth with a toss of 125-7. Matt Dolloff of Sacred Heart aired out a 44-5 toss for sixth in the shot put. South Shore League champion Peter Maitland, of Cohasset, was third in the javelin with a throw of 163-7.

Michelle Woodford of Silver Lake, Notre Dame's Alisa Cotter and Cohasset's Gillian Weber took 3-4-5 in the 800 with times of 2:27.62, 2:27.92 and 2:31.11, respectively. Erin Broderick of Notre Dame was second to Brown in the 400 with a solid 1:00.43. Rockland's Laura Kemp took sixth in the 800 with her 2:33.24. A strong surge by Norwell's Kayla Halloran over the last 400 meters earned her a third-place finish in the mile at 5:18.90. Amanda Allen of Abington ran 17.21 for fifth in the 100 hurdles

Cohasset's Maura O'Brien was sixth in the high jump with a leap of 4-10 and the Lakers' Allison Colwell finished sixth in her event, the triple jump, with a mark of 32-7. Notre Dame's Grace Cunningham was sixth in the shot put (35-7-1/4) and captured fourth place in the discus with a toss of 107-5. Silver Lake's Janet Veracka broke into the javelin's top six with a 110-3 toss, good for fourth. Notre Dame's Cara McDonough was eight inches behind winner Lindsay George of Foxboro with her throw of 121'. Veracka's teammate Ashley Damewood was sixth with her 105-10 toss.

Hingham High's Chris Orr sped to a 41.03 finish in the 300 hurdles and Andy Roberts of Rockland grabbed fifth in the 2 mile at 10:34.97. Chris Cummings bolted to a second-place finish for Hanover in the 200 with a time of 24.48. Silver Lake's Tim Cheney ran 24.68 to finish a solid fourth. In the 800, Sacred Heart's Tom Harrington clocked a very respectable 2:07.98 for fifth place and Silver Lake's Sean Clark took fifth in the 400 with his 54.02. Steve Fitzgerald of Norwell followed with a 54.12 to clinch sixth.

200-meter favorite Brian Krupczak, a Cohasset High senior, was unable to participate in the Principal's Meet due to a pair of pulled leg muscles he suffered in the Skippers season ending meet with Rockland last week. His status for this Saturday's Class D meet, where he was hoping to defend his state title, was unknown at the time of this writing, although reports did not sound too favorable.

Boys improve to 11-4

Less than 24 hours after he learned he'd been named to the Pilgrim Conference all-star team, sophomore midfielder Matt Davis scored a career-high four goals, added an assist, and led the Skippers to a hard-fought 15-9 victory over Catholic Conference member Catholic Memorial.

Two of Davis' goals helped break open an early tie, as Cohasset ran off five unanswered tallies in six minutes during the first and second quarters to take a 6-1 lead. The Skippers never looked back, extending their margin to 11-3 at halftime, before emptying the bench for the second half.

"Today we played two and a half solid quarters," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "Catholic Memorial had to beat us to stay alive for the state tournament, and we wouldn't let them. We slacked off for about ten minutes in the third and fourth quarters, and gave up some goals that we shouldn't have, but overall it was a good effort that gives us some momentum."

The momentum was gained by a short-handed team, missing leading scorer Ronan Buick and five other regulars. Davis, and attackmen Paul Previte, Curt Kahn and Eric Libby were able to pick up the scoring slack, while defensive captains Geoff McWilliams and Justin Langham dominated the Catholic Memorial attack. Both Langham and McWilliams, in addition to their defensive responsibilities, helped out the offense with an assist apiece.

All-Conference goalie Kyle Weber made five stops, before giving way to freshman Nick Murphy in the third quarter. Murphy had seven stops, letting in six goals. Weber, shifting to attack, picked up a goal and an assist, using assistant coach Terry Kahn's stick and slightly dazed long-stick midfielder Nick Spirito's shoulder pads.

"As you might expect from a school with a hockey tradition like CM's, the hitting was ferocious," said Coach Orcutt. "Lane Forrer, Sean Chase and Spirito all took tough checks. And we picked up eleven penalties, unusually high for us. But every time we bounced back, and usually made the Knights pay."

Besides Davis and Weber, Cohasset's scoring came from Previte (two goals, three assists), Kahn (two goals, two assists), Libby (two goals), soph middies Tom Anderson and Robert Hickey (a goal and a pair of assists apiece), Forrer (a goal and an assist) and freshman Mike Devine (one goal).

With the win, Cohasset moves to 11-4, with its final regular season game set for Wednesday night against Ashland at Alumni Field. Like Catholic Memorial, Ashland is on the bubble for the state tournament.

"It promises to be exciting," said Orcutt.

In other boys lacrosse action this past week:

Skippers Fall to Marshfield, 13-9
Finish 7-4 in Pilgrim Conference

Missing high scorer Ronan Buick, and losing two more starters by halftime, the Cohasset Skippers fell to Pilgrim Conference rival Marshfield on Friday, 13-9.

The Skippers closed out their league season at 7-4, their best record in the Pilgrim in four years. Cohasset led 4-2 early in the second quarter on a pair of goals by sophomore attackman Curt Kahn, and single tallies by classmate Tom Anderson and junior attackman Eric Libby.

However, before the period was finished, senior defenseman Greg Figureido would be sidelined with a bruised hip and junior attackman Jason Moore would soon follow with a sore knee. Marshfield took the lead for good late in the quarter, 5-4, and never trailed again.

"This was a game I thought we could win, even without Ronan," said Coach Kevin Orcutt. "Unfortunately, as has been the case with our other losses, we can't sustain our good play against the better teams for more than a few minutes at a stretch. Our skill level is as high as any team's. But our mental toughness is lacking. And if we want to do well in the state tournament, we have to be able to win a game like this."

Cohasset's scorers were led by junior attackman Paul Previte, with three goals and three assists. Kahn, who also had an assist, was the only other multiple goal scorer for the Skippers. Libby and Anderson each had an assist to go with their goals. Junior midfielder Sean Chase and soph middie Matt Davis had a goal apiece, while soph middie Robert Hickey had an assist.

Junior Kyle Weber had another solid game in the net, with 22 saves, many of them point-blank. He got good support from senior defensive captains Geoff McWilliams and Justin Langham.

"Now is the time for each player to look in the mirror, and decide how he can rise to the challenge of the post-season," said Orcutt. "Both our next two opponents have outside chances to make the tournament, so I expect they'll play us with a sense of desperation. We need to play with the same intensity."

Closing in

Skippers outplayed and out-hustled Barnstable. Kristin Sheerin again led the Cohasset scoring charge with five goals and one assist. Maura McKenney had another outstanding game at her center position with three goals. Nicole Turgiss added a goal and Suzanne Lynner an assist. Gia Petrakis recorded 12 saves.

Junior co-captain Carlie Carter, recovering from an early season knee injury, played solidly on defense.

Cohasset 13 - Marshfield 8

Cohasset traveled to Marshfield on Monday afternoon for a game critical to their state tournament hopes. The girls did not disappoint, coming away with a well earned victory. Kristin Sheerin (4 goals) and Suzanne Lynner (3 goals) played strong games for Cohasset. Returning from injury, Sera Genovese scored two goals in limited action. Kate Grimm, Nicole Turgiss, Sarah Brady and Maura McKenney all chipped in goals. Cohasset's only senior, Swedish exchange student Maja Heildeix, scored her first varsity point with a beautiful assist. Gia Petrakis (14 saves), Julie Lordan, Katherine Coyne, Katie Portanova and Carlie Carter anchored the defense with help from sophomore Nell Brewer and freshmen Libby Meikleham and Ashley Faber.

Cohasset coach Cathy Gaudiano is very pleased with her team's effort so far this season.

"For a young team like ours to make the state tournament would be outstanding," said Guadiano. "Our team is mostly freshmen and sophomores with only five juniors and one senior. The girls have an excellent shot at a tournament berth this year and are building a strong foundation for next year."

Cohasset finishes its regular season with both an away and a home game against Bourne and a home game against Duxbury. One more victory or a tie should assure a trip to the state tournament.

Cohasset White stays unbeaten in weekend of mixed results

Contributed by Chuck Jaffe

The Cohasset White 12-and-Under (12-U) team continued to lead the way in a strong season for Cohasset Youth Lacrosse, running its record to 9-0 to headline another strong weekend for the local boys.

The White team needed its third consecutive fourth-quarter comeback to beat Scituate 1 on Saturday in a seesaw battle. Scituate opened a quick-two-goal lead before Cohasset scored three straight assisted goals —Jared Kinch from Peter Oswald, T.J. Kennedy from Michael Grimm and Chris Mills from R.K. Quebec — to get its first lead of the game. The teams then traded goals to go to halftime tied at 4-4.

Scituate took advantage of some Cohasset mistakes to get a 6-4 lead early in the third period, but Cohasset closed the gap to 7-6 heading into the final period. Just as it had done in beating Hanover and Scituate 2 in the previous two weeks, Cohasset White dominated the final period, scoring two quick goals to get the lead. They then allowed Scituate to tie the score once more before putting the game away.

Kinch and Austen Lanzillotti led Cohasset with three goals each. Oswald and Grimm both finished with a goal and an assist. Ramsey Davis added a goal and Corbin Faber an assist to close out the scoring. Justin Hollis played an outstanding game in the goal with nine saves.

On Sunday, the White team took the field in Marshfield and blew out an overmatched Marshfield team 20-0, recording the first shutout ever for a 12-U team in the six-year history of the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program.

Michael Grimm and Austen Lanzillotti lead the scoring parade with four first-half goals each. Grimm added an assist, giving him 25 points on the season, eclipsing the highest single-season scoring total for any fifth grader in the history of the program. Corey Chase added a goal and three assists, Chris Mills scored two and had one helper and Dan Trendowicz a goal and two assists as Cohasset controlled every phase of the game. Peter Oswald, Jared Kinch, Jeff Brown and Ryan Kucinski added first-half goals, with Kinch and Ramsey Davis adding assists. Sam Parker had three stops in the Cohasset net.

In a second half shortened to keep the scoring in check — and with Cohasset players under orders not to score unassisted goals — Cohasset moved its defense up to attack and put its scorers in the defensive half of the field to protect the shutout.

The result was the first goals of the year for Patrick Flynn and Justin Hollis in the third quarter, and Kurt Gritzan, with two tallies in the fourth period. Flynn, Hollis, Lanzillotti and Kyle Pinkus had the assists in the second half, while Oliver Brennan stopped two shots to preserve the whitewash.

The Cohasset Blue team followed the White game by raising its record to 6-3 with a dominating win over Marshfield 2 by the final score of 13-4.

Michael Bunstein scored four goals and four assists to lead the way, with Dan Trendowicz and Mark Flibotte contributing two goals each. Ryan Kucinski, Matt Burgess, Nick Zappolo and Chris Davis scored single goals, with Trendowicz and Zappolo picking up single goals.

Justin Hollis made six saves in the Cohasset net as the Blue team jumped out to an 8-1 lead and simply never allowed Marshfield to get back into it.

At the 10-and-Under level, Cohasset played its most complete game of the season on Friday, May 18, going on the road to beat South Boston, 10-4. The team never trailed, jumping out to a 2-1 first-quarter lead on goals by Danny Brady and Will Wise. Cohasset stretched the lead to 5-3 at the half on goals from James Reichardt, Chris Brown and Jake Wheelwright.

The locals pulled away in the third quarter with goals from Reichardt, Dean Driscoll, John Kearney and Oliver Forrer. Danny Brady added an assist.

Owen Landon finished the scoring with a fourth-quarter goal. Wes Ulmer handled the goaltending and had a fine evening.

On Sunday, Cohasset hosted Hingham for a rematch from an early season contest. Hingham came out of the chute strong, racing to a 4-0 lead. Cohasset awoke in the second quarter and closed the gap to 5-2 at the half on goals from Owen Landon and Will Wise.

Cohasset dominated the play in the second half, but just couldn't find the net with most of its scoring chances. Eamon Davis scored a third-quarter goal on a feed from Andrew Bell and Will Wise finished the scoring in the fourth quarter, as the game ended with Hingham on top 7-4.

At the 14-U level, Cohasset suffered through its first losing streak of the season, losing to South Boston 6-5 on Friday, and then by 4-1 to Falmouth on Sunday.

In South Boston, playing with an undermanned squad bolstered by members of Cohasset's 12- U contingent, the team jumped out to a 3-1 second-quarter lead on two goals by Aidan Buick and one by Mike Martone, who was starting his first game of the season at attack. South Boston came charging back with three straight goals to take a 4-3 lead into halftime.

In the third quarter, most of the action was at midfield until South Boston scored to take a two-goal lead.

Cohasset responded just before the end of the quarter with a great play from Chris Barber who took the ball from his own end, sped along the sideline, and hit Buick with a long pass. Buick then fed Mike Bunstein on the crease for the score.

After South Boston scored to regain a two-goal lead late in the fourth quarter, it looked as though the game was over. With under two minutes to play, Chris Barber made a hard move to the goal, drew the defense, and dumped to Buick, who finished his hat trick on the night. Cohasset took two penalties in the last minute that eliminated any chances to tie the game.

On Sunday, the U14 squad completed its Road Warrior weekend in Falmouth in a tough defensive struggle. After a scoreless first half, thanks to some great goaltending by Chris Simms, Falmouth finally scored twice near the midpoint of the third quarter to break the offensive drought. Cohasset responded with Sam Steele coming from behind the Falmouth cage to stuff home the only goal of the game for Cohasset and make the score 2-1. Cohasset had several opportunities to tie the game but missed the net or was shut down by the Falmouth goalie. Near the end of the fourth quarter, Cohasset wore down and gave up two goals on long passes that were scooped up by Falmouth attackmen.

Mr. Intangibles

with Massachusetts Club teams. In basketball, he was a lights-out shooter who hit too many big three-pointers to count this year for the Cinderella Skippers. His emergence from out of no where to claim the top spot with the tennis team this spring only cemented his status as Big Man on Campus (sorry, Erik).

Then there's TJ whose flashy play and numerous clutch hoops with the basketball team made him the clear focal point on the court this winter. That bent for the spectacular carried over to the spring, where his slick plays at the most visible position on the diamond captured so much of the attention.

So O'Brien has been, to a large extent, relegated to second or third banana status behind his two close friends, even though in the opinion of those two friends, and just about everyone else closest to the scene, he is every bit as irreplaceable.

Indeed, Shea sounds almost annoyed when reminded of the fact that Doug doesn't get his share of the fanfare.

"I don't know what people are looking at," said Shea. "Matt (Bilodeau, TJ's little brother) and I were talking about that the other day, and we couldn't figure it out. He's a two-sport all-star (baseball and soccer) and he did so much for our basketball team this year too. If anyone deserves the press, it's him."

Cohasset High Athletic Director Ron Ford, who coached the basketball team this winter, is another who proclaims vexation of Doug's lack of attention, though he also seems to have a handle on it.

"It's not always easy to put your finger on what Doug does," said Ford. "He just always finds a way to provide whatever is needed. I know he's appreciated a lot more by his coaches and teammates than he might be by casual observers."

And this is something Ford feels only makes him all the more special.

"He really is a great natural athlete who probably could put up big numbers or stand out more if that's what he wanted, but that's not what he's about," appraised the first year AD. "I think he's more about doing whatever it takes to win. He does the little things that don't show up in box scores any where, but that make the difference between winning an losing. He's Mr. Intangibles."

A lot of times, those intangibles don't even have to do with anything that takes place on the floor.

Cases in point: Doug suffered a severely sprained ankle toward the end of the soccer season, but never missed a game as the team went deep into the tourney. It also bothered him well into the basketball season. Again, he kept going. Then he got, in Ford's words. "the flu to end all flus." In one game, he threw up repeatedly on the sidelines, but kept wanting back in the game..

"How can teammates see something like that and not be inspired to give it all they can?" posed Ford. "Doug really is the ultimate gamer. His teammates had an incredible amount of admiration and respect for him. I think the attitude he brought rubbed off on everyone he played with, and that made everyone around him that much better.

"I'll tell you what, there was never a question with his teammates or coaches just how incredibly valuable Doug was."

Interestingly, the one person close to Doug who doesn't seem offended by the lack of recognition Doug has received to date is Doug himself.

"Doesn't bother me at all," he reported with a chuckle. "To be honest, I just love playing team sports and contributing. It's a great feeling to be part of a successful team, especially a team that does a lot better than most people thought. That's what we had in baseball and soccer this year, and it was great to be a part of something like that. "

Doug, a regular on the honor roll, was an early acceptant this past fall to Trinity College. He will enter the school this fall undecided, though he's leaning toward international business or economics. One thing he'd like to do is enroll in the school's study abroad program and spend a semester in Italy.

He also plans on trying out for the baseball team next spring, and might even give it a go with the soccer team in August. If he does indeed follow through and make the varsity squad, he will play his first college game against Bowdoin, Shea's team.

Imagine how great it would be if O'Brien, a forward, did something that led to a win in that game. Who do you think would be more pleased: O'Brien or Shea?

That we could even ponder this potential scenario speaks volumes,

We'll make you smile.

Showdown with Norwell caps memorable season for tennis teams

some adjustments to her game."

And that is exactly what she did, battling back to take the second set 6-4. At this point, every player, coach and spectator was glued to the court, watching the two trade game for game, until it got to a tie breaker and 6-6. It was Grossman's turn to step it up, as she won 7-4.

"Everybody participated in this win," said Meehan, making a special point to cite the great fan support her team received. "The girls who were watching gave the energy."

Despite the intensity of the match, there were no hard feelings from either side. Not surprising, considering these two teams went 1-2 in the SSL sportsmanship awards this year.

The boys, after being blasted by the Clippers 5-0 just a few short weeks ago without even winning so much as a set, came out and clearly played their best match of the year. Though the final score of the team match was 3-2, the Skippers cannot possibly feel disappointed with a score like that against the unbeaten league champions seven years running.

The first doubles team of co-captain senior Jeff Scribner and sophomore David Ingber, recently named to the All-star team as a pair, beat Norwell's previously undefeated doubles team of Rory O'Connor and Justin Meddaugh, 7-5, 6-4.

Both Scribner and Ingber only had their serve broken once each the entire match.

"In my (six) years of playing varsity tennis, I have never beaten anyone from Norwell," smiled an exuberant Scribner after the match. "It feels great to leave this season beating them in two sets."

Previously, O'Connor and Meddaugh had only lost one set the entire year. That came in a three set victory over Hanover's All-Star duo of Matt Edwards and David James, the tandem that gave Scribner and Ingber their only loss of the year.

Senior Erik Shea gave Cohasset its other win of the day at second singles, a three set nail biter that culminated in a 6-4 victory after the pair had split sets. Junior Mike Wiltshire was on the losing end, and he too had only lost one set the entire year before Shea ended his season-long streak of nine wins.

Cohasset freshman Jesse Brewer, who had not played singles in a match all year, played a sensational match against Norwell's undefeated third singles senior captain Sebastian Colella. Although Colella prevailed in two sets, the Skipper rookie played "out of his mind" according to several onlookers, consistently throwing off the game of the experienced senior.

"He played like a human backboard," said first year coach Pam Wilson. "He missed nothing."

At first singles for Cohasset was senior captain Chris Golden, who also made the All-star team with his 7-3 record this year at first and second singles.

Although he was completely content with the way he played, there was simply nothing he could do to stop the regionally ranked sophomore phenom Sam Bitetti.

Second doubles, consisting of senior Casey Brewer and freshman Robbie Carpenter, put in as impressive a showing as they were able, but sickness slowed them down against the freshman pair of Mike Allen and Kyle Schwartz, as they lost 0-6, 1-6.

Both teams for Cohasset showed that they can stay competitive with even the best of the competition around. With tournament coming up in early June, and Norwell presumably in line to be one of the top seeds in the Div. 2 tournaments for both genders, this should be a huge lift for both the boys and girls teams.

weeks back, an affair Knurek described as the one that sent the entire season in the wrong direction.

In that game, Cohasset was leading by one in the bottom of the seventh, but let it slip away with sloppy defense and timely hitting by the Green Wave. With a win in that game, Knurek explained, the team would have brought its record back up to sea level but instead dropped to 3-5 and never recovered.

Last Saturday, with their backs to the wall, Cohasset laid out Nantucket on the road, 11-2, to at least momentarily keep their playoff hopes alive.

Senior starter/third basemen Tim Grassey logged the complete game win in this one, scattering only four hits through seven innings with seven strikeouts.

Senior captain Doug O'Brien, who made the All-Star team for the second straight year as a centerfield leadoff man, paced Cohasset's offense with two RBI singles, and two runs scored, to help break the game open.

Tim Straughn was Cohasset's most consistent pitcher this season, but was repeatedly victimized by poor defensive

In addition to leading his team with the bat, alongside junior Robin Murphy in left, Cohasset has a very solid defensive outfield.

"Anything that is hit in the air, it is almost like you can walk off the field with two outs because you know he will catch it," said Knurek.

Murphy remains the only errorless everyday player on the team.

Straughn continued to swing a hot bat, lacing two triples and knocking in three runs. His season totals are still tops on the team with a .408 average and 15 RBIs.

"For a reasonably low scoring team, that's pretty good," assessed Coach K of Straughn's nearly one RBI per game pace.

Police bag supermarket peeper

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset police arrested a 27-year old Marshfield man Sunday afternoon after he was caught in the women's restroom at Shaw's Supermarket with a mirror, peeking under the stalls.

Shane M. Whelan was charged with lewd and lascivious behavior, and accosting a person of the opposite sex. He also faces two counts of assault and battery on a police officer, resisting arrest, and being a disorderly person after scuffling with Sgt. David Cogill and Officer Christy J. Tarantino.

Police were called to Shaw's just after noon, after a store employee reported using the restroom and seeing a mirror coming from under the middle stall next to her.

According to a report filed by Tarantino, store manager Daniel Leonard checked the restroom, found that a person was still in the middle stall, and guarded the door until police arrived.

Tarantino said he and Cogill knocked on the door and asked if anyone was in the restroom. A male voice said he was and would be right out. When he exited, Tarantino said the suspect told him he thought it was the men's restroom.

Whelan denied having a mirror, but Tarantino found a mirror on a telescopic handle in a stainless-steel box used to discard women's sanitary napkins. The mirror had the name Ken Whalen engraved on the back.

When Tarantino emerged from the stall with the mirror, Whelan gave Cogill a forearm shove and attempted to run out of the restroom. Cogill grabbed Whelan's sweater and along with Tarantino took him to the floor and handcuffed him.

Tarantino said Whelan, a former Marine, flailed around to avoid being handcuffed.

"If you try to handcuff someone who doesn't want to be, it can be a tough thing to do," Tarantino said.

An eyewitness account said the incident happened feet away from the store's floral department, and that very few people were aware of what was going on.

A search of Whelan's car turned up a black folding knife and can of pepper spray. Because Whelan does not have a Firearms Identification (FID) card, he was also charged with illegal possession of pepper spray.

Whelan was released on $100 bail. He had no prior record.

He was arraigned Monday morning at Quincy District Court and pleaded not guilty. A pre-trial hearing is scheduled for July 5.

Cohasset man rescued from fire

Cohasset police dragged an unconscious Howe Road resident to safety Friday night, when a fire broke out in his condominium.

Officer William Quigley said when he arrived at 60 Howe Rd., a man said his neighbor, John Dougherty, 60 was passed out on the kitchen floor and that the kitchen might be on fire.

Quigley looked in through the unit's window and saw heavy smoke and Dougherty on the floor. He entered the unit, saw a kitchen chair and kitchen cabinets on fire. He ran back out to his cruiser, got a fire extinguisher, and went back into the unit. Officer James McLean also arrived with his fire extinguisher.

According to Quigley's report, he and McLean dragged Dougherty by his ankles to the door and then lifted him to a side lawn by his hands and feet. Quigley said Dougherty had burns to his right leg and knee, and was transported to Quincy Medical Center.

Cohasset firefighters quickly extinguished the rest of the fire. The cause of the fire is under investigation. Quigley's report said Dougherty appeared "highly intoxicated, and that there was evidence of heavy drinking on the scene."

Quigley and McLean both said they inhaled a "substantial amount of smoke at the scene as well as chemical powder from the two extinguishers," but refused medical treatment.

Man, 81, arrested for attack with golf club

Cohasset police arrested 81-year old Dominic Emanuello on Friday for allegedly hitting a Cohasset man with a golf club at the town Recycling Transfer Facility in retaliation for an argument the previous night.

According to a report by Officer James McLean, Dean Williams, 50, of King Street, said Emanuello hit him from behind with a golf club, shortly before 2 p.m. McLean said Williams raised his shirt and showed a bruise on his lower left side.

McLean drove to Emanuello's Hull Street house, where Emanuello was waiting for him in his driveway. When asked what happened, Emanuello reportedly told McLean, "I stuck that Dean Williams, he had it coming to him for years."

Emanuello was arrested and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon. McLean said Emanuello was unable to place his hand behind his back at the time of his arrest because he claimed to have hurt his back in an altercation with Williams the night before. He was restrained using two pairs of handcuffs.

A golf club shaft was taken from his truck as evidence. It's not clear which club Emanuello used, as the club head was missing. Police said they smelled alcohol on Emanuello's breath, but did not consider him drunk.

Three RTF workers were questioned at the scene, but said "they didn't want to get involved."

The dispute between Emanuello and Williams has apparently been ongoing. Officer Christy Tarantino, who assisted McLean, said, "It's an old fight that's been going on. They're like the Hatfields and McCoys."

In court Monday, Emanuello charged Williams with assault and battery on a person over 65 as a result of their altercation the night before.

Stellwagen Sanctuary steps up patrols to protect marine life

By Michael Marotta
MMAROTTA@CNC.COM

The summer season means crowded waterways.

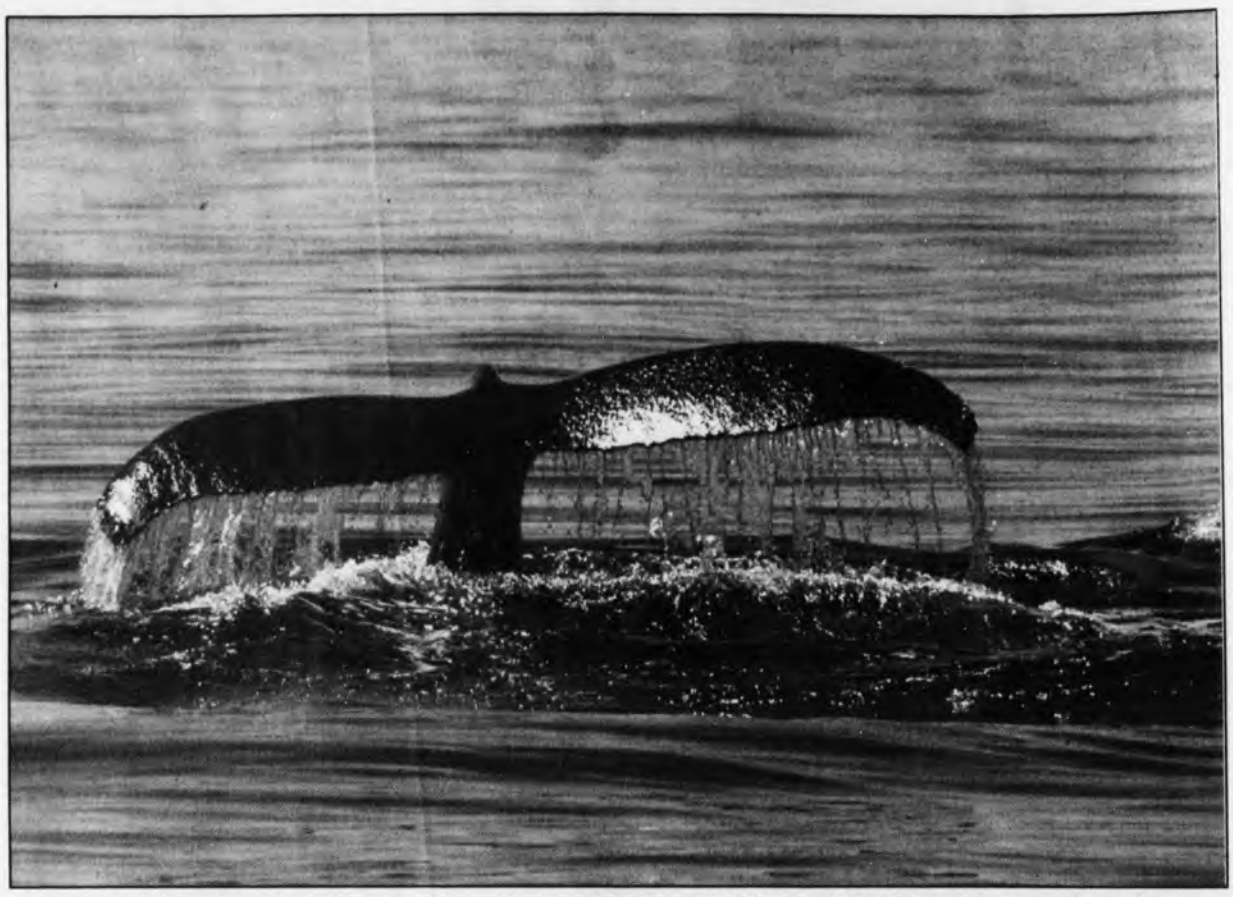
Local fishing fleets are joined by a fleet of recreational boaters and chartered vessels all enjoying warmer days at sea.

The 842-square foot Sanctuary is located at the mouth of Massachusetts Bay and stretches between Cape Ann and Cape Cod. Roughly nine miles off the coast of Scituate, the Sanctuary is an area not visible from the harbor but a hotspot for whale watching and recreational boating, which makes it dangerous for marine animals.

But the boats aren't alone out there.

Whales and other marine animals make their way into area waters at this time of year and the combination of man and mammal can sometimes be a deadly one

To help protect sea life from speeding boats and charters full of whale watchers, the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary located off Scituate's coast has teamed up with the Massachusetts Environmental Police and other wildlife organizations to step up police patrols off shore.



"There is (heavy traffic) during the summer months, with somewhere in the area of 20 boats that provide whale watching services and literally thousands of small boats," said Sanctuary Superintendent Dr. Craig MacDonald.

"The sanctuary is a very large place but there's really no visible sign post for the people out there who are crossing a boundary into a special place under the law," he said.

The 842-square foot sanctuary is located at the mouth of Massachusetts Bay and stretches between Cape Ann and Cape Cod. It is one of 13 sites in the National Sanctuary System, and was designated a National Marine Sanctuary in 1992. It's headquarters is located on Edward Foster Road in Scituate.

Roughly nine miles off the coast of Scituate, the Sanctuary is an area not visible from Scituate Harbor but it is a hotspot for whale watching and recreational boating, which makes it dangerous for marine animals.

"It's an area of remarkably high species diversity and yet folks don't seem to understand (the laws)," said MacDonald, who noted the area is home to humpback and right whales, white sided dolphins and myriad other wildlife. He noted that MEP officers will patrol the waters and monitor boat activity, offer educational materials regarding speed, traffic and other laws as well as collect data on vessel traffic and document violations of federal marine environmental regulations.

A humpback whale's tail rises above the surface of the waters along the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary. In concert with the Massachusetts Environmental Police, the sanctuary will be stepping up patrols in the area during the bust summer boating season.

In conjunction with the added police presence, the International Wildlife Coalition will help raise awareness by posting signs along the Sanctuary's coastline. Christian Valle of the Wildlife Coalition said that signs will be posted at boating docks in Scituate and other coastal towns educating boaters that a protected wildlife sanctuary lies just a few miles off shore.

The added patrols, which began in Scituate last Friday, will not only curb unruly activity and high boater traffic, but also educate residents about the Sanctuary. MacDonald noted that the first year of patrols will serve more as an informative rather than punitive measure.

"When they hear the name Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary people think we're a financial institution," he said, adding that the program is a way "to begin laying the foundation for future activities within the sanctuary, and educate folks through this interpretive enforcement program.

"We're stepping up the level of surveillance on the sanctuary to be sure that all the federal laws that apply can be enforced," MacDonald said. But the emphasis in the first year is not a heavy police action, it's primarily targeted at introducing folks to the notion that they are in a National Marine Sanctuary. We want to educate them to that fact."

MacDonald said patrols will continue in the area until October, when the high volume of boaters decreases dramatically.

Human 'docent-cy'

Brockton museum's guides carry on ancient Greek tradition

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

When visiting the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton, one of the first things you'll probably see are people resembling tour guides wearing name tags bearing the word "docent."

But the word docent is more than a name. It's a method of instruction that stretches all the way back to the days of Socrates. Docent is a word derived from the Latin word "docere," which means "to teach."

"Docents don't get a lot of attention," said Bette DeAngelis, president of the docent organization at the Fuller Museum of Art. "But a lot of museums around the country have them. Docents can be considered to be a breed of educators. Their job is to encourage participation and dialogue when it comes to looking at art." She added docents have existed at the Fuller since it opened more than 30 years ago.

DeAngelis has been a docent for 16 years at the Fuller, and she still enjoys it as much as she did when she first started.

"It's still so amazing for me…it's just a big kick," she said. "I have gotten so much value from doing it over the years, and I've also developed a number of great friendships. Personally, I love the idea of valuing other people's perceptions of art. And what really thrills me is how sophisticated the perceptions of many of today's children are."

DeAngelis said docents at the museum frequently work with groups of children on field trips from local schools, but she said docents have a way of encouraging artistic enlightenment among adults.

"The Alchemist" by Dimitri Michaelides is one of the many magnificent glass works on display at the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton.

There is a definite difference between the job of a docent and the job of a traditional tour guide, DeAngelis said.

"Tour guides just take you into an exhibit and start telling you about it and why it's important," she said. "But docents encourage a certain rapport with artists' work. They establish a dialogue, and they guide that process along. I like to think docents encourage healthy disagreements."

DeAngelis said when working with children, docents establish a "valuable, self-validating experience that cannot be found in any classroom."

She added the methods of any given docent are based on those which the ancient Greek philosopher Socrates used. As it is known, the ancient Greeks were some of the most artistic, articulate people in the world.

"Socrates was a great orator and teacher," DeAngelis said. "He was very perceptive."

Fuller education director Dawn Low took it a step further saying "Socrates' method of teaching was to keep asking someone questions until that questioning led up to a valid point."

And like Socrates himself, all the docents at the Fuller museum are highly educated on the subjects they speak about. Each docent the museum recruits is required to take a certain amount of "in-house" classes, but new recruits are also required to take art classes at Stonehill College in Easton tuition-free. The museum has an arrangement with the college.

"Throughout all of the training, new docents cover subjects like public speaking, dynamics of speaking, and presentation," DeAngelis said. "The one class we insist they take at Stonehill is the survey of Western Art which covers time periods like ancient Greece, to European art, to American art through the 1950s. They're free to take other courses if they choose."

In their element, Docent president Bette DeAngelis with one of her many volunteer docents Dr. Miriam Johnson.

DeAngelis said all kinds of people volunteer to be docents—professors, lawyers, nurses, teachers, and others. DeAngelis said there are about 25 docents on the roster at the Fuller museum, all of them volunteers. She said a docent's position is not a full-time job, it's just something many people enjoy doing.

"I love dealing with people, especially young people," said Edna Bowers, who has been a docent at the Fuller museum for more than 20 years. "The first thing I usually say when I'm talking to a group of kids is 'I'm not going to ask you to like everything you see, but I want you to respect the effort and talent of the artist.' I want children to feel comfortable with art, and I want them to talk about it freely instead of whispering and being shy."

"Tour guides just take you into an exhibit and start telling you about it and why it's important. But docents encourage a certain rapport with artists' work. They establish a dialogue, and they guide that process along."
-Betty DeAngelis, docent president at the Fuller Museum of Art

Like DeAngelis, Bowers said being a docent all these years has taught her invaluable lessons and enriched her knowledge of art for the better. She her favorite thing is seeing repeat customers at the museum.

"If a child or adult goes away with information I've given them one day, well then that's great," Bowers said. "But if they don't feel shy about coming back, that's even better."

To reach the Fuller Museum of Art in Brockton, call (508) 588-6000. The museum is located at 455 Oak Street. Tours with docents must be scheduled by appointment.

NRAS Festival of the Arts hits 25

By Laura Harvey
SPECIAL TO LIVING

The North River Arts Society's Festival of the Arts celebrates a silver anniversary this year.

On Memorial Day weekend (May 25-27), historic Marshfield Hills Village will once again be transformed into an open-air jubilee featuring art, music, dance, and a multitude of activities and entertainment for the young and the young-at-heart. Last year's festival included the work of more than 200 artists, craftsmen, and performers and attracted more than 4,000 visitors.

This year's festivities kick off on Friday, May 25 with a very special Gala Preview Party from 7 to 10 p.m.. The GAR Hall on Old Main Street will be alive with the sound of music and celebration as members and non-member friends enjoy a casual evening, inside the hall and under the stars.

As always, the Juried Art and Sculpture Exhibit, located inside the hall, will be open for viewing during Friday night's party. This show increases in popularity — and in excellence — with each passing year, as does the Juried Photography Exhibit, located directly across the street. The Art and Sculpture Exhibit will be open to the public after the Festival closes as well, from Tuesday, May 29 – Saturday, June 2. Hours 1- 3 p.m.

Musical entertainment on Friday evening will be provided by guitar duo, Swing Set. Patricia Drain and Paul Kinnear return this year to entertain throughout the evening with a lively selection of jazz and bossa nova tunes. A donation of $10 per person will be collected at the door for Friday's event. Gala goers should RSVP to Kate Norton at (781) 837-8091

Saturday morning, the Cathy Jo Irvine School of Dance opens the festival's entertainment under the tent at 11 a.m. Longtime dancers and teachers, Cathy Jo and her sister, Robin, will illustrate their love of dance by presenting selected acts performed by their South Shore students.

Roger Tincknell follows at noon, with his lively program, "Children's Songs and Singing Games". Roger, a self-described musician /storyteller/educator, will present a festive and participatory concert of multicultural, environmental, and traditional children's folk songs and singing games.

Back by popular demand, the highly entertaining Henry the Juggler will perform the tricks of his trade throughout the village on Saturday and Sunday from noon until 3 p.m., defying the laws of gravity with an assortment of balls, clubs, rings, torches, stilts and a wonderful use of body language and facial expressions. Henry has been performing and teaching juggling for over 15 years. He will also entertain in the Tent at 2 p.m. Sunday.

The Strings, a closely-knit group of professional woman who have been making music together since 1968, perform in the Tent at 1 p.m. on Saturday.

Popular folk singers, The Armstrong Brothers follow at 2 p.m. Festival regulars, this group, along with special guest, 10-year old guitarist/folksinger Ana Buckley, has a repertoire which includes traditional folk, contemporary acoustic, and original music.

Winding up Saturday's entertainment roster, the enchanting musical group Yarina enters the Tent at 3 p.m. where they will perform a two-hour concert of highly original, hauntingly beautiful music of the Andes. Originally founded in Ecuador by four brothers, Yarina's extensive travel throughout Europe and the Americas has resulted in a unique creativity that is truly spellbinding. Their imaginative repertoire incorporates jazz, blues, Latin and western classical masterpieces – certain to surprise and delight even the most jaded listener.

On Sunday, Whidden's School of Fitness opens the day at 11 a.m. with students demonstrating their skills in karate and tai chi under instructor Roger Whidden.

At noon, the Marshfield Junior and Senior High School Jazz Ensembles promise to delight and crowd with pop, jazz, rock, swing, and Latin music.

Back by popular demand, the highly entertaining Henry the Juggler will perform the tricks of his trade at this weekend's North River Arts Society Festival of the Arts.

The music continues at 1 p.m., as Mixed Company, an eclectic singing group, takes the stage. Boasting a repertoire of unusual arrangements of popular standards from the 1930's, '40's and '50's, as well as some Gospel favorites, Mixed Company is an ensemble of ten local singers who, after performing a jazz arrangement of "All the Things You Are" during a 1998 production of "You and the Night and the Music", decided to join together to share the love of that particular style of music.

Get ready for some serious foot stomping at 3 p.m. as Dr. Watson Reid & Americana perform a two-hour concert to wind up the weekend's festivities. This polished, very enthusiastic 9-piece band — with a sense of humor – is guaranteed to liven up any party. With outstanding vocals, brilliant instrumentals and an irresistible rhythm section, this group performs a wide range of intergenerational music for the entire family.

Rick Larson will return this year to entertain children with his wonderful array of balloon creations. Look for him by the Children's Tent. Members of the South Shore Writers Club will read original works of prose and poetry along the Village streets on Saturday from noon until 2 p.m. Also on Saturday, classical guitarist John Tavano will perform Renaissance, Baroque, Spanish, Flamenco and music from Latin America from 11 a.m to 1 p.m. inside the GAR Hall. On Sunday, Steve Bielski will perform renaissance music near the crafts area from 1 to 5 p.m.

The Festival Puppet Parade, which promises to delight children of all ages as a very colorful gang of strange and mystical creatures marches through the Village at 2 p.m. both Saturday and Sunday All of the very large puppets are creations of young NRAS students.

And what would an arts festival be without art.

This year's exhibit in the Feature Barn is strictly for the birds/ In celebration of the festival's 25th anniversary, a host of talented NRAS member artists are participating in a delightfully eclectic fundraiser entitled Art is for the Birds. A large number of well-known artists were called upon to create their own version of a masterpiece based on an ordinary birdhouse. Considering each participating artist possesses a unique style and mindset, visitors to the Feature Barn will be treated to a whimsically varied exhibit. All originally decorated birdhouses have been generously donated by the artists, and are available for purchase.

This year's festival poster is printed from a watercolor by local artist Jean Simms, and is title "A Day Off." The 16th poster in an ongoing series, this lovely print will be sold at the poster table near the information booth throughout the festival.

More than twenty talented artisans will be offering their wares this year at the Festival's juried Craft Exhibit. Featured artists include: Marj Bates, handmade glass beads, Robert Bugle, still life photography; Gloria Clark-McGinn, handpainted furniture and accessories; Dianne Dakowicz, watercolor prints; Sally Dean, decorative pins, ornaments and clocks; Gwendolyn Deardorf, hand-woven clothing; Sandra Donnellan, pottery; Ellen Gutekunst, glass and wire sculpture; Beth Harvey, pottery; Janet Cushing Howard, decorative painted furniture and accessories; Edmund Johnson, watercolor paintings; Bernie Korites, oil paintings and prints; Vickie Kusleika, hand-woven baskets; Carol Lebeaux, hand-cut portrait silhouettes; Michael McCarthy, hand-carved birds; Ann McMahon, hand-made hats; Scott Mike, ceramic and wooden accessories; Bob Mosher, hand-carved decoys; Gail Marie Nauen, paintings and prints; Judy Rossman, stoneware pottery; Nancy Simison, glass jewelry; Mike Sleeper, panoramic photographs; Dianne Thompson, paper-treated jewelry; Jack and Betty Wright, jewelry.

Another popular Festival feature is the open-air "market" known as Art in the Tent. Well-known local and regional artists participate in this exhibit by offering original artwork and prints for sale during the Festival. The selection is abundant – the works are exceptional.

Admission to the festival is free. For more information on the weekend-long event call the NRAS at (781) 837-8091.

Roger Tincknell will perform, "Children's Songs and Singing Games" at the festival on Saturday afternoon.

Shrimp curry in a hurry

Curry is often thought of as a time-consuming ethnic specialty, something one might make once a year for a dinner party.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

But if you thought of curry as a means of infusing almost any dish with the fully blossomed fragrance of rich spices married to a subtle foundation of onions, ginger, and garlic, you would be closer to the truth. Best of all, if one opts for shrimp, this dish can be prepared in fewer than 45 minutes.

Curry is nothing more than a stovetop stew. Curry recipes begin by cooking onions, after some testing, I found I preferred sliced onion to chopped. I also tried heavily browning the onions, but this flavor was more appropriate for a darker curry, such as lamb. Here I wanted a soft, sweet flavor to complement the shrimp. The next ingredients that go into the pan are garlic and ginger. Much testing has been done on the best way to prepare the pair for curry in the kitchen at Cook's Illustrated, and we have found that pureeing the garlic and ginger produces a smoother, more integrated flavor than if they are simply chopped. A simple rasp-style grater works well, or you can opt for a food processor. (If you use a large model, a bit of water must be added to get a smooth puree.)

The essence of curry is the spices. There are two types: whole (cinnamon, cloves, cardamom pods, peppercorns, etc.) and ground (coriander, cumin, and turmeric). Whole spices are traditionally fried in oil; ground spices are added along with other ingredients. In this recipe, I found that whole spices overpowered the shrimp, so I stuck to the ground variety and added a bay leaf. The question before me was how to use them. A bad curry is either weakly flavored - the spices are wan and undercooked - or burnt tasting, the spices having been fried until they develop a harsh, acrid flavor.

To find the best cooking method, I first made a curry in which I simply simmered the spices along with the other ingredients. I found it raw tasting, watery, and flat. When the spices were added directly to hot oil, however, with no other ingredients, they quickly became muddy and bitter. Finally, I added the ground spices to the oil/onion mixture along with other ingredients and their flavor was enhanced without overcooking.

To determine when the spices are properly cooked, simply look for the point at which the bright orange oil starts to separate from the other ingredients. At this point the mixture needs to cook only another half minute, with constant stirring, before adding 1 cup water. (A nonstick pan is particularly helpful since the oil/spice mixture has a tendency to stick.)

Some curry recipes have tomato, some have yogurt, some have both, and most include water. I found the combination of yogurt and tomato to be ideal with shrimp and decided to use two chopped plum tomatoes and 1/2 cup plain yogurt. Once this mixture has cooked for about 20 minutes, the shrimp and other ingredients are added for a few minutes of cooking to finish. I also tested the addition of coconut milk and found that in the case of shrimp, it made the curry heavy and dull tasting. The simple yogurt- and tomato-based curry is lighter and brighter.

Other ingredients that complemented this dish included a dash of freshly chopped cilantro and frozen peas (added straight from the freezer), which go into the pot along with the shrimp, which need only 5 minutes of cooking. For the shrimp, I use 1 1/2 pounds large shrimp (or 31-40 to the pound). Smaller sizes are too hard to clean and add little texture; larger sizes are too expensive. An added benefit is that most freezer sections offer 1 1/2 pound bags of frozen shrimp-a quick, easy, and satisfying solution given that most shrimp are previously frozen anyway.

SHRIMP CURRY WITH PEAS AND CILANTRO

A garlic press and a rasp grater are two valuable kitchen tools that will dramatically improve the flavor of this dish. Diced garlic and ginger don't add anywhere near as much flavor to a curry as grated or pureed.

3 tablespoons vegetable or canola oil
1 medium onion, thinly sliced
1 bay leaf
6 medium garlic cloves, pureed, grated, or pressed through a garlic press
1 (2-inch) piece of ginger, pureed or grated
2 teaspoons ground cumin
2 teaspoons ground coriander
1 teaspoon ground turmeric
Scant pinch to 1/2 teaspoon cayenne pepper to taste
1/2 teaspoon salt, plus more to taste
2 whole plum tomatoes, chopped (about 3/4 cup) or 1/2 cup canned crushed tomatoes
1/2 cup plain yogurt (whole milk or low fat)
1 1/2 pounds large (31-40) shrimp, peeled and deveined
1 cup fresh or frozen green peas
2 tablespoons chopped fresh cilantro leaves

1. Heat the oil in a large skillet over medium-high heat. Add the onion and bay leaf and cook about 5 minutes, or until the onion is softened and translucent. Stir in the garlic, ginger, ground spices, 1/2 teaspoon salt, tomatoes, and yogurt. Cook, stirring constantly, until the liquid evaporates and the oil separates and turns orange, about 5 to 7 minutes. Continue cooking for an additional 30 seconds, stirring and scraping the bottom of the pan constantly.

2. Add 1 cup water and stir to combine. Reduce heat to maintain a simmer, cover, and cook for 20 minutes or until the mixture is slightly thickened. Add the shrimp, peas, and cilantro and cook uncovered for five minutes longer, stirring occasionally, to evenly cook the shrimp. Season to taste with salt and serve immediately with basmati rice.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

THURSDAY, MAY 24

Astrological sunshine and blue skies prevail today. A harmonious alignment of Venus and Jupiter sets the stage for social activities. Influences are prime for vacationing. If you are working, plan a lunch date with friends and colleagues. Chat, surf, network. This is an especially favorable period for meeting people, establishing new relationships, business or personal. The Gemini moon becomes inactive at 7:12 p.m., when it opposes Mars. Take it slow and easy in this period. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 10:42 p.m.

FRIDAY, MAY 25

The sun and Saturn conjoin at 4-degrees Gemini, 8:33 a.m., prompting you to focus on practical matters. Fulfill commitments and promises you have made to others. Zero in on work projects you have been putting off and get them out of the way. The moon continues to travel in emotional Cancer all day. Choose your words carefully. Others may be temperamental, hypersensitive, moody. Spend quality time with family and close friends this evening.

SATURDAY, MAY 26

The Cancer moon aligns with Venus at 8:44 a.m. and becomes inactive for the remainder of the day. That means that new starts are off limits. If you are working, finish projects already begun, handle routine chores and errands. An applying alignment of Mercury and Mars may spark arguments, irritability, fast driving. Stop, look and listen. Don't take chances or do anything risky.

SUNDAY, MAY 27

At 1:12 a.m. the moon enters Leo, generating a party mood for the remainder of this holiday weekend. Put personal or business concerns on the back burner; go with your playful side. The Leo moon forms harmonious contacts to Saturn and the sun in the morning. A lunar opposition to dreamy Neptune in the afternoon prompts you to kick back and enjoy.

MONDAY, MAY 28

A Leo moon all day urges you to come from the heart and live life to the fullest. The moon interacts with Jupiter, Venus, Uranus and Mars, setting the stage for an upbeat day. Uranus is slowing its rate of motion, preparing for retrograde travel. That means that you should expect the unexpected. Go with the flow. Spur of the moment ideas will be the most successful.

Select fragrant plants for the spring landscape

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

In nearly every landscape, each growing season produces memorable successes accompanied by equally dismal failures. While a few trees, shrubs and perennials tend to be remarkably consistent performers from year to year, certain plants stand out as star attractions in given years. Usually, just about the time a gardener considers discarding a particular specimen or vowing never to purchase another member of that plant family, the perfect combination of growing conditions produces an extraordinary display and we find ourselves at the nursery searching for more of these beauties.

These joys and disappointments are the result of many interconnected influences including the timing of moisture in relation to when the plants form their buds, the presence or absence of snow cover and the severity of the winter, temperature fluctuations throughout the year, especially just prior to and during the bloom period, exposure to desiccating winds and a host of elusive environmental factors. Few gardeners are likely to forget the infestations of gypsy moth caterpillars in the past, spring canker-worms in recent seasons or the devastating April Fools storm, all of which produced dramatic effects on our landscapes.

The spring of 2001 will most likely be remembered for the floods of March, the unseasonable warmth of early May which dramatically accelerated the bloom season and foliage growth, and the horrific killing frost which decimated the delicate flowers and tender new shoots and foliage of emerging plants. Even the PJM rhododendrons, which are one of our most reliable bloomers, suffered from the severe temperature drop. Despite these setbacks, have the azaleas ever been more spectacular? A myriad of pink, lavender, salmon, red and white blossoms have created breathtaking displays of indescribable beauty around every corner. Cool temperatures have prolonged their fanfare and nurseries can barely keep up with the demand.

As I pass through my garden archway to admire the glorious blooms of red and white azaleas and a sensational Scintillation rhododendron which frame my water garden, I am greeted by the delicious, fruity fragrance of the Carolina Allspice (Calycanthus). Although the odd-looking, rusty red blooms are not particularly showy, their 2-inch flowers, which resemble miniature water lilies, produce a heavenly scent reminiscent of strawberries and oranges or a combination of allspice and ginger. Its perfume is only noticeable during the afternoon and early evening. This suckering, deciduous shrub which is native to the US, prefers a moisture-retentive soil in sun or dappled shade and reaches an ultimate height of 8 feet. The foliage turns bright yellow in autumn.

Nearby, along my back walkway, a handsome specimen of Daphne Carol Mackie is smothered with sweetly-scented clusters of pink and white flowers. I grow this 3-foot shrub for both its springtime fragrance and its attractive deep green foliage, with thin white margins, which persists well into winter. The majority of daphnes are extremely aromatic. Many will produce sporadic bloom again in the fall. They prefer soils having a high humus content which is well-drained and less acidic than our typical New England soils so the addition of lime is recommended as is a layer of mulch to preserve moisture as they resent dry soils. Be sure to select an appropriate location in sun or part shade when planting as they also resent being moved.

The Viburnum family offers numerous, marvelously fragrant varieties. Often referred to as the Maybush, the Koreanspice Viburnum (V. carlesii)is widely grown for its strong aroma and attractive foliage. Clusters of white flowers emerge from pink- or red-tinted buds, unveiling their sweet, spicy perfume during May. Other popular cultivars include V. Cayuga and V. Mohawk. While all members of this broad family of both deciduous and semi-evergreen shrubs are not remarkably fragrant, as a whole they are handsome, easily grown specimens which provide reliable blooms and good-looking foliage throughout the growing season. Many cultivars display extremely showy fall fruits which are favored by birds and wildlife. Adaptable to a wide range of growing conditions, they are tolerant of partial shade and thrive in moisture-retentive soils.

When selecting plants to provide fragrance in the landscape, plant for a sequence of aromatic flowers or strategically locate individual fragrant plants along various walkways, porches, doorways or gates to avoid competing perfumes and enjoy their pleasing scents as you stroll by.

'Lest we forget'

Veterans recall their fallen comrades

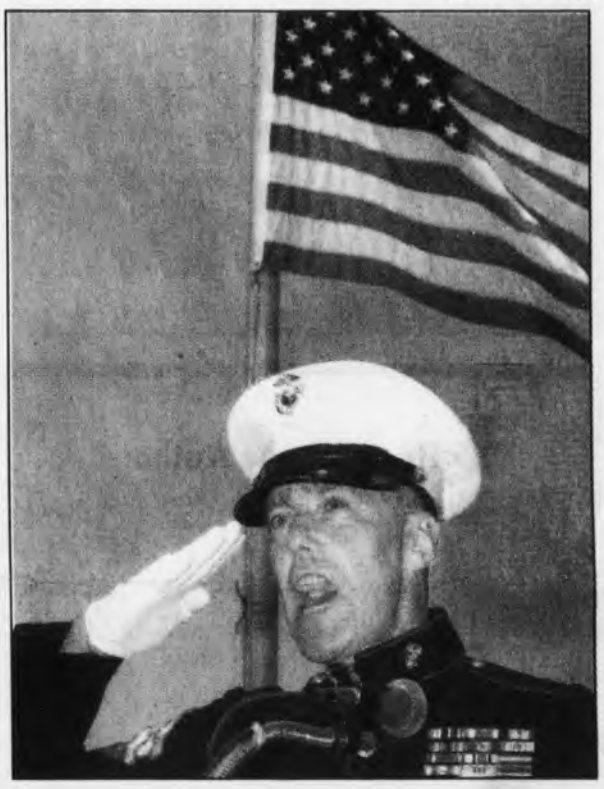
By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset residents of all ages gathered on Memorial Day and were told not to forget the young men, who made the supreme sacrifice in defense of their town and country.

"We must never, ever forget them," Sgt. John Morgan, who served in the United States Marine Corps during the Vietnam War, told the large crowd gathered around Veterans Memorial Park.

Morgan's speech capped off Monday's Memorial Day celebration that benefited from a huge turnout and favorable weather. Veterans Memorial Park was a sea of color, lined with the 50 state flags, veterans in full dress uniform, and brilliant green grass, all under a bright blue sky.

He said the scores of veterans assembled before him were the ones brave enough to fight for their country.



"When we were young, many of us did not know the difference between fascism, communism or even what the rights of a sovereign nation were. What we did know was that if America called we would answer that call," said Morgan, a Bow Street resident. "We did not look to a military deferment, we did not ask for conscientious objector status, and we certainly did not run to Canada.

"Today, as on every Memorial Day, we honor the brave, young soldiers that also answered that call and ultimately gave the supreme sacrifice."

A total of 21 soldiers from Cohasset were killed in action in World War I, World War II, the Korean War or Vietnam War. No one from town was killed during 1991's Gulf War.

Mother Nature smiled down upon the ceremonies, as a gray, overcast sky gave way to sunshine just as the sound of the parade's bands reached the hundreds of spectators gathered on Cohasset Common. The sky remained blue until George H. Mealy American Legion Post Commander Stephen Wigmore told the veterans standing in uniform and in attention that they were "excused."

Comeback kids are on parade

School marching band reestablished

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A middle-high school marching band is something Cohasset hasn't seen in about 20 years. But, thanks to a first-year teacher that's changing.

Greg Lessard grew up in Middleboro where high school marching bands are the norm. Upon arrival in Cohasset last fall, he decided to take the middle and high school bands a step further, literally.

While musically, the band is proficient — learning to march and play at the same time for its Memorial Day debut was another matter.

But after hours of practice on pinwheels, keeping in line and in step, the 39-member group clad in matching blue T-shirts provided thousands along Monday's parade route with a stirring medley of John Philip Sousa marches and other patriotic songs like Yankee Doodle.

And to top it off, the band joined the Rusty Skippers, a town band, in playing The Star Spangled Banner, when the parade stopped at the Veterans Memorial at the harbor for the speeches and veterans tributes.

"Learning to keep our rows straight and sound good while we played was a real challenge," Lessard said.

Besides delighting the spectators, Lessard has an ulterior motive in bringing the band out of the concert halls and into the streets. Being in a band can be cool, he said.

Many local teenagers seemed to agree as evidenced by the dozens of band members' classmates who tagged along on their bikes and in-line skates during the parade.

Lessard said playing an instrument and being in a band complements academics and sports.

"We compete like a sport but we also study hard to learn our craft," he said.

The high school and middle school bands are actually separate but joined up for the Memorial Day Parade.

"Learning to keep our rows straight and sound good while we played was a real challenge."
— Greg Lessard, band teacher

Many students drop band at the high school level due to academic pressure and other factors.

"Every kid here is academically oriented and wants to take the top courses like Advanced Placement," Lessard said. "We have to find creative ways to find rehearsal time."

But Lessard, who chose Cohasset over other job offers because the band teacher position here is full-time, wants to reverse the trend of high school students dropping band. He says there are currently 19 eighth-graders in the middle-school band and thinks most will continue next year.

Musically the students at both the middle and high school levels like to be stretched, he said.

"The kids are offended if it's too easy, they want to be challenged with hard music," he said.

Common district buildings to grow

Community center, parish house expand

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Common Historic District Commission approved major changes to three district houses Tuesday, including wing additions to the First Parish Church's parish house, as well as the South Shore Community Center.

It also approved an enlarged hip roof on the rear of the Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House on 63 Highland Ave., now owned by Charles Furtado.

The commission debated the changes in a 3-1/2 hour meeting before more than 25 spectators who were packed into the first-floor meeting room in Town Hall.

The First Parish Church received approval to tear down the 1960's expansion at the rear of the building, and replace it with a new wing that would almost double the size of the existing wing. The new wing would be set back from the front of the current building, and will have windows on either side of the doors, pillars, and a second set of windows between the door and the original 1722 building.

It was the second set of windows that bothered the commission at its last meeting, May 15, when the church proposed windows all across the wing's front. Josiah Stevenson, the church's building committee chairman, came back with plans that he said kept the second set of windows in the same scale as the rest of the house.

Nicholas Noon, of 11 North Main St., was concerned with the numbers of windows facing the common, and also approving a structure that stretches from "setback to setback" on the north and south sides of the property. He considered the plan "going a bit beyond the norm of what's on the common."

The commission debated the changes in a 3-1/2 hour meeting before about 25 spectators.

The commission also had a problem at its May 15 meeting with the church's proposal to build a foyer onto the front of the carriage house, which is used as a daycare center. It had urged the church to consider having children enter from the rear of the building, however Stevenson said the committee voted against that idea. Instead, the church will use the doors on the front of the carriage house, and construct an interior vestibule — a plan that was well-received by the commission.

Commission member Mary Larson considered the overall plan "keeping with the appearance of the historic district," as did fellow members Marion Atkinson, Richard Horn and Gail Parks. David Buick voted against the plan. Commission members Jacqueline Clark, Garry Gardner and Marjorie Hovorka, all members of the First Parish Church, abstained from voting.

Election fundraising

Adrienne MacCarthy raised and spent $2,258.87 in her recent bid for a seat on the school committee this past spring. Pat Martin, who won in a recount by two votes, managed to raise $1,125 and spend just $850.90. However, she reported an outstanding liability of $2,000 in legal fees for her challenge of MacCarthy's petition for a recount. MacCarthy received an "in-kind" contribution of more than $2,596 from attorney and supporter Patrick Waters for his legal help responding to Martin's challenge. An in-kind contribution is a service given to a candidate at no charge.

Peter Pratt spent $234.85 of his own money for lawn signs in his successful bid for a seat on the Planning Board. Citizens for Cohasset Preservation reported spending $180.65 for signs supporting the Community Preservation Act.

No other candidate spent or raised money during the town election period.

Street repaving

The Cohasset Department of Public Works announced recently that street resurfacing that was supposed to begin on May 21, will now start on June 4. The schedule is:

Jerusalem Road – from Linden Drive to Atlantic Avenue

South Main Street – from #391 to #429

Atlantic Avenue – from #391 to Nichols Road

Highland Avenue – from Sohier Street

Pothole problems

A group of residents on or near Sheldon Road recently sent a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad asking the town to repair and fill "the many deep potholes" on the street.

"We are approaching the busy summer season at Beach Island where children and adults will be walking, biking, and driving over the inferior surface of Sheldon Road. This will pose a safety hazard," said the letter.

Haddad said he has notified Department of Public Works Superintendent Harold Litchfield, but unfortunately, because of a lack of funds, the town won't be able to fix the street under the next fiscal year, which starts July 1.

Wolf Pit update

The attorney for the former owners of the recently-taken "Wolf Pit" property off Beechwood Street have notified the town it will accept the $150,000 offer in damages.

The Water Commission, acting on a Town Meeting mandate, took the 14-acre property owned by Leland and Leonora Jenkins of Jerusalem Road, and Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street by eminent domain earlier this month in order to protect the town water supply.

CHS turns back clock for 50th

Also, breaks ground for 'new' school

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

With the help of alumni, current and former faculty and staff, and a bunch of pictures, Cohasset Middle/High School celebrated its 50th year in the Pond Street building.

The two-day party featured alumni speakers, a 50-year pictorial display of the middle/high school since it first opened its doors in September of 1951, and the official kickoff of the school renovation project.

"I'd say it's been a success," said celebration committee chairman Jeanne Quigley. "It was nice reminiscing as well as a beginning of preserving our future memories."

The anniversary party marked both beginnings and endings. With a simple ceremony Friday afternoon, the middle/high school expansion project officially got underway. The $41 million renovation and expansion of both the middle/high school and Deer Hill School will end the schools as the town knows them, and transform them into modern school complexes. The celebration also marked the creation of the new Cohasset High School Alumni Association, which will work to create an archive of past, current and future events.

On Friday, grades 7-12 packed into the Sullivan Gymnasium to hear life lessons from five Cohasset High School alumni, including Jerry White, Class of 1981, who is the co-founder of the Landmine Survivors Network.

White was a junior at Brown University visiting Israel in 1984 when he stepped on a landmine and lost his lower right leg. The organization he co-founded was invited to share the 1997 Nobel Peace Prize by award winner International Campaign to Ban Landmines, as reward for its awareness work on the dangers of landmines.

But White, a former class president, started his speech Friday on a much more local note.

"I remember my senior year thinking, 'I just want to get the hell out,'" he said to the laughter and applause of the students in attendance.

In an attempt to emphasize the importance of his work, White threw two inauspicious pieces of metal across the gym floor and had a student from each side go and pick one up, which they eagerly did.

"You just picked up landmines," he told them. White said if they were live mines, one student would be dead and the other would have lost a limb.

He then told the attentive students about the fateful day in Israel, his recovery and lessons he has learned since.

"Be prepared for moments in life that explode, and think how you'll get on with your life," he said. White drew a standing ovation at the end of his speech by challenging students to "get to know a bigger world than Cohasset."

Jim Lagrotteria, the student council president in 1952, and member of the first graduating class from the new high school, told the students about what it was like going to school in Cohasset 50 years ago.

"As I was walking in here, I must have passed 11 Jeeps," he said. "The only Jeeps we saw were olive, had no tops, and were driven by Army personnel."

Student council president-elect Dan Littauer read a letter from Navy Lt. Commander Stephen Bowen, Class of 1982, who is now in training as a National Aeronautics and Space Administration astronaut candidate.

"Aside from the outstanding academic quality of the education [I] received at CHS, I felt fortunate to have had several teachers who taught us that there was something bigger than ourselves," Bowen said in his letter.

Also giving speeches were Matt Trask, Class of 1975, now Chief Executive Officer of Communica Inc., and founder and chairman of the Cape Cod Technology Council; Nina (Steele) Welford, Class of 1973, who is the founder of More Opportunity for Recreation and Education (MORE) and managing director of the Hingham Symphony Orchestra; Dr. David Keefe, Class of 1972, director of the Division of Reproductive Medicine & Infertility at the Women & Infants Hospital of R.I., and New England Medical Center in Boston; and Carol (Conway) Bulman, Class of 1980, president of Conway Financial Services and vice-chairman of Jack Conway & Company.

On Saturday, half of the gymnasium was filled with makeshift walls covered in yearbook photos from over the years, as state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Rep. Garrett Bradley presented citations from the legislature honoring the 50th anniversary of the middle/high school.

Brian Marks accompanied singer Lily (Carbone) Sestito on guitar, and entertained those gathered with renditions of "The Way We Were," by Barbra Streisand, and "In My Life" by the Beatles.

School Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey challenged the school's current administration and staff to "stay focused" during the upcoming construction project, and "continue to work for the students of the past, present and future."

Quigley thanked the organizing committee for their help, as well as that of a number of high school students that spent hours putting together the pictorial displays.

"The kids, who are relatively removed from a lot of these years, really got into it," she said, mentioning Rachel Quigley, Abbi Butman, Nancy Winters, Brian Bilton and Jay Bertovich.

She also thanked the faculty and staff that made an appearance at the celebration.

"As always the faculty and staff showed up without question," she said. "They always come."

School renovation project kicks off

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Despite being beaten to the punch by a number of backhoes earlier in the week, the Cohasset School Building Committee dug its ceremonial shovels into the ground and officially kicked off the $41 million school renovation project last Friday.

With the sounds of heavy equipment clearing the area behind the high school in preparation for the new athletic complex— school and town officials marked the beginning of the two-year project as part of the 50th anniversary celebration of the current middle/high school building.

"We're so glad to offer you the surroundings you students so justly deserve," School Committee Chairman Stephanie Noble told the middle/high school students gathered in the Alumni Field bleachers for the ceremony.

TLT Construction has already taken over the lower field in the front of middle/high school, and the first stages of construction — safety fencing and access roads — are already visible.

The project is welcomed by students tired of being ambushed by the building's dilapidating condition.

"There's not many of us that can't remember having something drop from the ceiling onto them," said Student Council President Ben Bixby.

Although the school building will undergo a radical change, he said the spirit of the school will remain the same.

"The school will continue, although the school house won't," he said.

Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed said the town was "proud of all the work you do up here" and glad to support the project.

School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford welcomed not only the current members of the committee, but also Arthur Somerville and Gordon Flint who were involved in the construction of the current middle/high school building in 1951. He thanked the residents of Cohasset for their support of public education, and also urged them to commit the resources needed to keep the schools up-to-date once completed.

Students, faculty and guests then gathered in the middle/high school courtyard for the ceremonial groundbreaking. Middle/high school Principal Michael Jones, Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo, Koed, building committee chairman Rob Spofford, Noble, Bixby, Supt. Edward Malvey, student council president-elect Dan Littauer, and students Eric Belz and Libby Meiklehan dug the first shovel-full, followed by the school building committee and project's architects and engineers.

Malvey said TLT Construction will continue to clear the area and haul fill from the bluff behind the middle/high school until the start of summer vacation when the renovation work will start in earnest. The first thing to come down will be the middle/high school library, which will be moved temporarily into the Dorr Gymnasium.

Work is expected to start at the Deer Hill School shortly.

Reflecting on a wonderful holiday weekend

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

A GREAT WEEKEND

Hello Cohasset. I hope that all of you had a safe and enjoyable Memorial Day Weekend. The town had a lot going on and all events were a tremendous success. The assembly held at the Cohasset Middle/High School on Friday morning was amazing with speakers from years past, followed by a Ground-Breaking ceremony that was really well attended. The students then enjoyed an all-school cookout and I hear that those kids sure can eat!

Friday night also at the CHMS, a great event took place with families coming out to enjoy the music of "Ball in the House." Radio Disney opened the show and an apology to all on the mystery ice cream, it showed up finally about two hours late. Oh well, the show did go on and it was fantastic.

On Saturday, the Golden Anniversary was in full swing at CHMS and alumni, friends and family came to the school to celebrate 50 years of excellence. Senator Robert Hedlund and Representative Garrett Bradley made two presentations and for me, the most moving part was the beautiful singing by Lily Sestito and Choral Director, Bryan Marks. It was truly a wonderful dedication to a wonderful school. Bring on the construction, let's move forward and get ready for the next 50 years!

On Monday, the Memorial Day Parade was so fantastic. I don't have the actual numbers but it looked like it was a record crowd. Cohasset sure knows how to remember and honor our Veterans and members of our community who fight for our town and country on a daily basis. This is a great show of town pride and who knows, maybe some day we will start a 4th of July celebration of our own here in town.

BABY GRANDSON

Olivia Linsley of Cohasset wants us all to know that she is a grandmother! Joel and Claudia Linsley of Sutton, Mass. are the proud parents of a baby boy, Chase Charles who arrived on March 18 at Newton-Wellesley Hospital. Chases' maternal grandparents are Charles and Heidi McCobb of Wethersfield, Conn. Congratulations.

MAGNA CUM LAUDE

Nichole L . Santoro was recently awarded a bachelor of science degree in elementary education, magna cum laude from Salve Regina University in Rhode Island on Sunday, May 20. Nichole is the daughter of very proud parents, Charles and Andrea Santoro and is a CHS graduate. She is a 2001 inductee into Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities. She is also a member of Kappa Delta Pi honor society that recognizes excellence in education.

WOOSTER GRADUATE

Another young lady from Cohasset, Ashley Brister received a bachelor of arts degree from The College of Wooster in Ohio on May 14. While at college, Ashley was a member of Crandall House and Pueblo de Esperanza. Ashley also spent two years on the varsity tennis team and she was an English major. Ashley is the daughter of John and Susan Brister. Great job, Ashley.

DELEGATE

Cohasset resident, William "Bill" Hannon was recently made a delegate to the International Congress of Societies of Industrial Design. He attended the societies' regional conference in Santiago de Chile. Bill is a professor of Industrial Design at the Mass. College of Art.

SPECIAL LADY

On a sad note, I would like to take this space to say a fond farewell to a woman who touched many lives in our school community. Last week, Mrs. Barbara McCabe, a specialist at the Joseph Osgood School passed away. This woman, the mother of three daughters, touched everyone who came in her path, children, families, staff and friends. I would like to let her family know that we are all thinking of them in this time of need and hope that they can someday, think of Barbara without crying and remember the magic and love that she showed to everyone. Walking into the school last week and seeing the open grief and shock really made me see how much of a difference she made on all levels. She will truly be missed by all.

VASSAR LACROSSE

Elizabeth Pierson, a Milton Academy graduate and sophomore at Vassar College is on the varsity women's lacrosse team at Vassar. The team just finished the season with an overall record of 5-10 and a UCAA record of 1-7. In its first season of Upstate Collegiate Athletic Assoc., the team found the going very tough but did turn out four-conference wins against Bryn Mawr, Mt. Holyoke, Manhattanville and SUNY-New Paltz. Beth, who is the daughter of Wigmore Pierson of Atlantic Avenue and Janet Pierson of S. Main Street had six goals and a shot percentage of .300. Great playing, Beth. Lacrosse is certainly becoming the game to watch and play.

PRE-PROM GALA

A reminder to all seniors and their parents. Don't forget the Pre-Prom Party being held at the Lightkeepers' on June 1 from 5-7 p.m. This is a wonderful time for all in the town to come and see our seniors all decked out and for the perfect photos to be taken. A professional photographer will be on hand, so remember your checkbooks! There will be no photographer at the prom.

LEHIGH NEWS

Amanda Gontarz, daughter of Robert and Donna Gontarz, earned a spot on the dean's list for the spring semester at Lehigh University, where she will be a senior next year. Amanda, a journalism major, is the Managing Editor of The Brown and White, Lehigh's newspaper, and is a member of Chi Omega sorority. This was great news Amanda!

HOUSE SWAP

A wonderful family has a request for someone out there reading this... Are you looking for a fun and inexpensive adventure this summer? Former Cohasset residents Elspeth and Alasdair Muir are seeking an interested "house swap" participant. They have done this for the last two years with great success. Their home is in Edinburgh, Scotland. They are hoping to come to Cohasset mid-July or early August for an approximate 1-3 week stay. If interested, and for more details you may email them at elalmuir@binternet.com or phone them at 011-44131-337-2082 or locally call Laure Kimla at 781-383-8161. What a great experience this would be for the right family!

Town war heroes to get more visibility

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset's fallen war heroes are about to become more visible.

Summer Street resident Peter Wood received permission from selectmen last week to reproduce the memorial to Cohasset's war dead that hangs in the rear of the Town Hall Auditorium, and create another memorial in the new Town Hall wing across from the Town Clerk's Office.

"These folks paid the price and my feeling is they should be in a more fitting place, where people who come into Town Hall can realize what price some citizens paid," said Wood, a 25-year veteran of the Coast Guard and Army Reserves.

Wood told selectmen the new display would not "replace" the one created by Noel Ripley. Instead, he said he just wants to "move them forward into the new Town Hall."

Wood said he already has duplicates of the 21 Cohasset men that died in the four major conflicts of the 20th Century, and would frame them, create name tags, and hang them at no cost the town. He also said the memorial could include a 22nd person who died in 1947 from wounds sustained during World War II.

Ripley said the original pictures can't be moved because it was a Town Meeting vote that established the memorial in the auditorium.

The proposal to duplicate the pictures had the majority support of the board.

"They paid the ultimate sacrifice, so I don't have a problem duplicating them," said Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed.

Selectmen approved Wood's proposal 4-1, with Selectman Michael Sullivan the dissenting vote.

"I'm not against the idea, I just think it needs more discussion," said Sullivan, who disagreed with Wood's assertion the pictures would be more visible outside of the auditorium.

Plans are to duplicate this veterans memorial display across the hall from the Town Clerk's office.

Wood argued at the meeting that other town halls, such as Hingham, has its memorials right inside the front door. But his belief in the need for a more visible display runs deeper than just because other towns do it. "I don't care if we were the only town in the country that did it, these people paid the ultimate price and should be in a place that people see when they come into Town Hall."

Wood said he is now working with Town Manager Mark Haddad to figure out the best layout for the memorial, and hopes to have it installed within the next couple of months. He said whatever is done will be done in a "dignified manner" so to take nothing away from the current memorial.

'Lest we forget' fallen heroes

Wigmore, who has been participating in Cohasset's annual celebration for 43 years, said this year's parade was "one of the largest I've been in."

He also said he, "really appreciates everyone coming out in honor of these veterans and those that have come before."

His son, Thomas Wigmore, Commander of the Sons of the American Legion, called the Cohasset turnout "the greatest tribute and salute a community could give."

The veterans began the celebration by parading to the town's four cemeteries — North Cohasset, Woodside, Beechwood, and Central. They met up with the middle/high school band, which made its first appearance in the parade in 20 years, the town Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts, and the Rusty Skippers at the South Shore Music Circus. Shortly after 11, Cohasset police cruisers made its way down North Main Street signifying the start of the parade.

Veterans briefly honored those names on the World War I Memorial at the edge of the common, with "Taps" and a gun salute, and then laid a wreath at Prisoners of War/Missing in Action Square at Depot Court. The parade, and the crowd, proceeded down Elm Street toward Veterans Memorial Park for Morgan's speech and raising of the American flags. "Taps" again played from two different areas in the crowd, and veterans fired three more volleys in memory of the fallen.

"We must never, ever forget them."
— John Morgan, Vietnam veteran

The annual post-ceremony cookout sponsored by the Lightkeepers Corporation at the Lightkeeper's Residence on Government Island drew a crowd. The line for hotdogs and hamburgers stretched from the house down the driveway, and almost to in front of the Lightkeepers Memorial.

Cohasset Lightkeeper Corporation member R. Murray Campbell said the group cooked up 700 hamburgers an 400 hotdogs for the 1,000-plus people that came to the cookout.

"Everything went well, we couldn't have asked for it any better," he said. "We didn't turn anyone away."

He said the corporation, now in its fifth year of putting on the cookout, donated any leftovers to the Cohasset Food Pantry at the Second Congregational Church.

Glenn Pratt, a National Guard veteran who served from 1966 to 1972, and is on the town's Memorial Committee, said he thinks the turnout is a sign of a rebirth of community interest in Memorial Day and Veteran's Day parades.

"I think there's been a bit of a resurgence in the country for veterans," he said. "It was big in the 50s, but went down in the 60s with the Vietnam War. But now they're stating to come back."

Pratt said he hopes for as big of a turnout in November when the Veteran's Committee dedicates the Gold Star Mothers Memorial as part of the new Woodside Cemetery on Veterans Day. The memorial honors Cohasset mothers who lost a son in war.

At the middle-high school, band is a course and not just an after-school activity as is the case in some other school systems. Lessard says an investment in music education can pay off in college scholarships and more proficiency in academics.

"It's a great way to tie all the academics together such as English and communication skills, math, science, creativity," he said, pointing out that studying Sousa marches also involved a history lesson.

Last fall, the band performed as a pep band at some athletic events. But Lessard says the band is not big enough yet to provide the scope of a football field show.

Lessard credits Steve Biagini, band teacher at Deer Hill, with helping to foster the program.

"We're building from the bottom up," he said.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

A memorable day

Most of the weather forecasters said Monday was going to be a wet, rainy day. Thankfully, they were wrong so Memorial Day parades and observances —like those in Cohasset — could be enjoyed by so many. The cemeteries and parks looked great, thanks to the Department of Public Works. In fact, Cohasset was all shiny bright — a town anyone would be proud to call home. We are grateful to Steve and Tom Wigmore and Ralph Perroncello and all those who faithfully plan and orchestrate the Memorial Day festivities and parade every year. While the holiday, which began as Decoration Day after the Civil War, is meant to be a solemn, sad time — the annual observances are also a celebration. No matter what the war, those who fought, many of whom paid with their lives, in their hearts were fighting to preserve the way of life that we so greatly enjoy today in towns like Cohasset. We believe those Cohasset soldiers who made the supreme sacrifice were smiling down Monday on the spectacle of the hundreds of happy families that flocked to the Memorial Day events.

CMHS marching band

Spectators greeted the new Cohasset Middle-High School Marching Band with applause and cheers as the 39-member group, looking sharp in matching T-shirts, marched in the Memorial Day Parade on Monday.

Congratulations to the band members and their director and teacher Greg Lessard on such a fine accomplishment. Even veteran and American Legion Post Commander Stephen Wigmore made note in his remarks of what a fine sight it was to see the school marching band back after a nearly 20 year absence. The band not only looked good, but also sounded great! There is nothing more stirring than hearing John Philip Sousa marches and patriotic songs like Yankee Doodle played so well. The band joined with the beloved Rusty Skippers at Veterans Park for the playing of the Star Spangled Banner. The unbeatable combination provided double the music for a rousing rendition of our National Anthem.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Relay For Life

TO THE EDITOR:

As the regional executive for development at the American Cancer Society, I would like to express my sincere thanks to everyone who joined this year's Relay For Life at Cohasset High School May 18 and 19. Participating in this year's event were 38 teams, raising more than $125,000 for the American Cancer Society's programs of research, education, advocacy, and local services for cancer patients and their families. This community is truly committed to the fight against cancer.

First, special thanks go to event co-chairs Craig Bleicken, Victor Vanderlugt and Gordon Behrer and to the Relay For Life volunteer planning committee who worked for so many months to make this event such a success.

Secondly, I want to applaud the many cancer survivors that participated in the opening ceremonies. Each year, there will be more people living wonderful lives following a diagnosis of cancer. They are the reason we continue the fight.

Finally, I would like to recognize and thank this year's corporate sponsors, the Rotary Club of Cohasset, Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank and media sponsor, the Cohasset Mariner. In addition, the "Taste of the Relay" which took place Friday evening raised more than $1,300 for the Relay For Life and would not have been possible without the 11 area restaurants that donated samplings of their specialty dishes. The restaurants featured were Atlantica, French Memories, Red Lion and Silver Spoon Café of Cohasset; Sunrise Assisted Living of Cohasset that provided desserts; Windsor Tea Shop of Hanover; Dagwood's of Hingham; Red Parrot and Schooners of Hull; X&O European Trattoria of Quincy; Trueman's Catering of Rockland; and the Borrowed Butler of Scituate.

Although cancer continues to touch so many of us, the Relay For Life is a testament to our country's dedication to the fight against cancer, the progress being made in the fight and the hope that cancer will be eliminated in our lifetime.

Beautifying village

TO THE EDITOR:

The Village Renaissance Committee wishes to thank the many people who helped to beautify downtown Cohasset this spring, particularly the merchants who planted flowers or allowed us to fill their flowerboxes. A special thanks to Cohasset Hardware's Tina Watson for planting and maintaining the two planters at the Town Pump. She has created outstanding floral displays for the past 10 years.

We appreciate the work of Robert Butman, who maintains the pump that his father Charlie built in 1991, and Ralph Dormitzer who engineered the pump and gets it working every spring. Additional thanks go to Cohasset resident Mimi White for helping to clean up Ship Cove Park (between Tedeschi's and French Memories); to George Roukounakis who, from his Olympic Citco Station, keeps an eye on our corner garden at the James Brook Walkway and waters it during dry spells; to Exotic Flowers for helping us select just the right colors; and to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation for donating six handsome trash barrels to the village.

The flowers look beautiful and we now have plenty of receptacles for litter. Let's all show pride in our historic downtown by keeping it clean and well maintained.

COHASSET CARES

Do you really need it?

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The title of today's piece appeared in the May 20 Boston Globe by way of identifying a letter to the editor from a Boston reader about gasoline prices. Two of the reader's sentences were: "Overall, we consume, consume, consume. Everything is prepackaged and cleverly marketing to appeal to our incessant need for instant anything." The staff artist's sketch accompanying the letter, showed an open wallet with what looked like an auto fuel tank gauge on the inside half of the wallet

Another letter to the editor was printed nearby, this one by Walter Bickford, coordinator of education for sustainability, Urban Harbors Institute at U.Mass. Boston. I'd like to quote several of his statements: "It is scientific fact that as global consumerism skyrockets, signs of ecological degradation and economic and social instability become more pervasive…Too few understand the hidden human, environmental and societal costs of American consumer choices and conspicuous over-consumption and wastefulness…The average American produces three times the amount of waste as the average European, polluting the water, soil and air necessary for sustainable, healthy living…To reverse these trends and act as though our children and country mattered, we must shift and reduce our consumption patterns…"

The average American produces three times the amount of waste as the average European.

Cohasset RECYCLING TRANSFER Facility
Cohasset green to recycle everything

Being one of the 3,000 present to hear the Buddhist monk Thich Nhat Hanh last Friday at the Hynes Auditorium, I am especially struck by Bickford's saying, "Largely because of the advertising industry, which the Globe aids and abets, Americans seem hell-bent on meeting non-material needs materially, while studies show that the pursuit of happiness is becoming more elusive. The Earth is not in balance, and neither are we. Consumption is the root cause of most existing environmental and societal problems and the inevitable instability and unsustainability of our economy…"

Pay-as-you-throw goes into effect in Cohasset on July 1. See you next time.

Sex and the 2nd president

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You're going to hear a lot about John Adams in the next few weeks, what with David McCullough's new biography hitting the bookstores and Bill Delahunt and Ted Kennedy twisting arms to have the U. S. president from Quincy memorialized on Capital Hill and Beacon Hill.

Indeed, the first local boy to make good in a big way has been largely ignored while his contemporaries George Washington and Tom Jefferson had monuments and memorials dedicated to their memories and Jack Kennedy had an airport and Ronald Reagan seems to be getting his name attached to anything that isn't nailed down.

After all, Adams was not only the second president of the United States, but he helped write the Declaration of Independence and the Massachusetts Constitution, which became the model for the American Constitution, and served as ambassador to any nation that needed the ministrations of a skilled diplomat.

But enough of that claptrap. Let's get down to the things that are important to today's news gatherers.

Like sex.

In the wake of Bill Clinton and Rudy Giuliani, even the New York Times, where all the news that's fit to print (and some that's not) gets printed, may well ask the crucial question: What was John Adams' sex life like?

"I was of an amorous disposition," he wrote in his autobiography, "and very early, from 10 or 11 years of age, was very fond of the society of females. I had my favorites among the young women and spent many of my evenings in their company . . ."

Sound like any president we know? His initials are WJC, or BC to his cohorts.

However, Adams added, his friends of the female persuasion "were all modest and virtuous girls and always maintained this character through life."

"No virgin or matron ever had cause to blush at the sight of me, or to regret her acquaintance with me," he went on, becoming what some thought of as a man who protested too much.

"No father, brother, son or friend ever had cause of grief or resentment for any intercourse (sic) between me and any daughter, sister, mother, or any other relation of the female sex.

"My children may be assured that no illegitimate brother or sister exists or ever existed."

The closest to a Monica Lewinsky or Gennifer Flowers on John's rap sheet was a girl named Hannah Quincy, sister of his friend Josiah Quincy and daughter of Col. Josiah Quincy for whom the city of Quincy is named. He came within a phrase of proposing to her when he was a struggling young lawyer.

Much later, when he was 84 years old and widowed and she was 83 and widowed twice over, the pair met again.

"What! Madam! Shall we not go walk in Cupid's Grove together?" he asked.

"Ah, sir," she replied, "it would not be the first time that we have walked there."

Think of what investigators from the Fox News Channel or the National Enquirer could have done with that one.

HEALTH NOTES

Protecting children from pesticide exposure

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last year the state passed a law which proposed to reduce the rise of pesticide exposure in children. The purpose of the law is to prevent unnecessary exposure; promote safer alternatives to pesticides; ensure notification of all involved; and promote the use of Integrated Pest Management (IPM) techniques to reduce relying on chemical pesticides. The law requires that all staff, children and guardians receive a standard written notification at least two days before any application of pesticides outdoors. The standard written notification must include:

- Date of start of application and approximate conclusion
- Specific location of the application
- Product name, type and EPA registration number
- A Massachusetts Pesticide Bureau Fact Sheet
- Purpose for which pesticides are applied

Pesticides have definite health effects and children are more susceptible than adults.

- A Massachusetts Pesticide Bureau approved statement describing ways to minimize exposure and precautions to be taken

For all outdoor applications, no children maybe located in/on or adjacent to the area where pesticide is being applied. Only the following pesticides may be used outdoors:

- Those that are part of the IPM Plan
- Pesticides which are not known or possible human carcinogens
- Pesticides containing inert ingredients which may be toxic
- Pesticides used purely for aesthetic purposes unless the town decides to use them for aesthetic purposes.

The only pesticides that can be used indoors when children are present are such things as bleach for antimicrobial purposes; rodenticides in tamper resistant bait stations; insecticidal limits; ready to use dusts, gels or powders; termiticides if there is an active infestation; and certain lower risk pesticides like garlic, mint oil or citric acids.

Pesticides have definite health effects and children are more susceptible than adults on whom the toxicity tests were performed. This leaves a burden of responsibility on parents, and the rest of us, to be constantly vigilant about what we inhale, what we eat, and what we ingest by other means. It's easy to say, "They claim the stuff is safe." It's up to you in this complex society to ensure that the things going on near you will not harm you. There are a lot of scare mongers who say bad things about many common substances. It's up to you to make sense about all of these conflicting claims.

Stephen N. Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

Town is on right track with train deal

MY VIEW

RICK COLLINS

Depending on which side of the issue you are on, Cohasset selectmen did one of two things when they signed the Greenbush mitigation deal two weeks ago. They either beat the MBTA for a better deal than the one the Dutch got from the aboriginal inhabitants of Manhattan, or they played the role of the Native Americans and sold the town down the river for some trinkets.

If you believe the former, join me in helping to count the millions of dollars the town will receive because of the deal. If you believe the latter, well, go write another letter that will never be read by anyone in the State House without the title of "Intern" before his or her name.

Whether or not you think restoration of diesel train service is the best solution to the region's commuter traffic problem is irrelevant when discussing mitigation deals. Mitigation deals are win-win solutions for towns, unless you consider a minimum of $1 million for the right of way, another $500,000 for other open space purchases, $1.2 million to help finally solve the James Brook flooding problems, $1.5 million for village improvements, and a legally-binding dispute resolution procedure, as "losing." The only way the town could lose is by burying its head in the sand, not signing a deal, and one day finding a train running through town without anything more than the minimal amount of compensation as required by federal law.

The town signing a mitigation deal is not equivalent to British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain giving up the Sudetenland and declaring peace in Europe. Selectmen Chairman Fred Koed did not drive back from a meeting with Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, hold the deal up in the air, and slowly say in his clipped Boston accent, "There will be trains in our time."

Cohasset has been fortunate. Thanks to the hard work of dozens of volunteers with no agenda except to ensure Cohasset is protected to its full ability, the town has made out better than a rich kid on Christmas morning.

No other town has received the attention afforded Cohasset, and arguably, no town has gotten a better deal. Not Beverly, not Newburyport, not Concord, and certainly not Abington, Bridgewater or Brockton.

Yes, the train will affect the town. It will affect the abutters through fenced-off backyards and the rumbling of a train 24 times a day (from someone who lives near the Bridgewater line, it feels like a truck driving by), and the rest of the town through traffic delays because of grade crossings, and extra congestion on some main roads. But a 383 or 749 or 545 telephone prefix doesn't entitle the bearer to enter a pristine world, free from noise and traffic once they turn east off Route 3A.

To expect the MBTA to build a silent monorail that glides on a cushion of air like in Disney World, or recreate the Hanging Gardens of Babylon in each abutters backyard is an unfair demand.

A lot of people were quite content with the deal as announced in January. But thanks to the fierce insistence of people like Peter Pratt, the town was convinced to go back to the negotiating table and the result was an even better deal.

But now the town has pushed as far as it can. It's a matter of an irresistible force meeting an immovable object in the form of a bureaucratic state agency. The town could stamp its foot and hold its breath until it turned blue, but all that would have been accomplished is the loss of time, and a town looking silly (see Hingham, 1995-1999).

The town hasn't lost its ability to fight the use of diesel engines, and probably should keep prodding the MBTA to electrify the rails much in the same way a nine-year old reminds his parents about a promised trip to the ice cream shop.

Though victory or defeat won't officially be declared until the first fare is collected, Cohasset should recognize its first battle victory and take time to give people like Tom Gruber and other town officials a big 'Thank You' for making the town a little bit better.

Reasons why runway 14/32 is a bad idea

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

This is the last week for sending your comments on the Environmental Impact Statement (EIS) for proposed runway 14/32. The Public Comment Period ends on June 6, for the federal process and on June 8, for the Massachusetts process. Make sure that your letters arrive by those dates at the addresses listed at the end of this column.

Here are some reasons why Massport's Environmental Impact Statement for 14/32 should be rejected:

1. To users of Logan, including those using private jets: if the runway is built, delays are expected to skyrocket. So you will not get in and out of Logan as fast as you do today.

2. 14/32 is opposed by the City of Boston and dozens of other Greater Boston communities. A new 109-page report, produced by an aviation-consulting company for 27 Logan-area communities.

3. Peak period pricing pushed Logan from 2nd in delays in the nation to 19th in the 1980's. It costs almost nothing to implement, can be done immediately, does not cause expansion and future delays, and does not require any construction.

4. 14/32 would at least triple low altitude flights over South Shore communities. There is no reason whatsoever for our areas to be subject to the current unacceptable and inexcusable noise caused by lack of enforcement of existing noise abatement rules.

5. 14/32 would triple and quadruple low altitude flights over communities to the North and West of Logan.

6. No public health studies have been done for the EIS to determine health impacts.

7. The EIS maps show that 75,000 new flights Massport claims would be "out over the water" are over South Shore towns. The pollution Massport claims gets reduced due to 14/32 would be dumped on South Shore residences.

8. The expansion caused by 14/32 would not make Boston a "world class city". It would immerse the world class attractions we already have and the entire ring of Massachusetts Bay communities in heavy air pollution and noise.

9. 14/32 was designed for turboprop aircraft, which are being rapidly phased out. 14/32 would not accommodate most of the regional jets replacing them.

10. The 14/32 proposal depends on using the South Shore as a major all day and all night flight path. The World Health Organization says a DNL of 50 decibels - 50 decibels in the day, 40 decibels in the night - is the limit to prevent major annoyance. The FAA accepts no responsibility for noise less than 65 dbDNL, more than 13 times the noise of 50 decibels!

11. The exact location of 14/32 is not specified in the EIS. More importantly, the proposed air space is not disclosed, because it has not been designed, highly unusual for this kind of EIS.

12. The regional transportation study Massport was charged with for the EIS was never done. Massport doesn't even support bus service to Providence, Manchester, and Worcester airports from its Logan-only suburban parking areas. That 9 of 10 new passengers use airports other than Logan is due to their amenities, not Massport's efforts.

Common district buildings to grow

South Shore Community Center (3 North Main St.)

The South Shore Community Center received unanimous permission to construct a 16-foot by 30-foot wing on the building's south side. The center had received permission for the construction 10 years ago when it built the north wing, but ran out of funds to complete the work. It also proposed adding shutters to the side of the building facing the common, replacing and unifying the mish-mash of windows on the same side, and adding a number of "mature plantings" to the front and side addition.

The wing will have two windows facing the common, in the same scale as the rest of the building, and three facing the village. It will also have a solid facade on the top to blend in with the rest of the building, and to block the rubber roof from sight.

"The current building does look a little off-balance," said Matt Salerno of the South Shore Community Center.

Larson, who recused herself from voting because of her position on the center's executive committee, insisted the center has the funds to do the work, and also to maintain the building. She said a planting plan is in the process of being created and will be on display at the center.

Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House (63 Highland Ave.)

The commission also approved a number of changes to the Capt. Samuel Bates Jr. House. It approved a change to the doors of the garage from rectangular to a rounded-off top. Furtado also plans to change the moldings around the doors. A proposal to add "coins" to the corners of the house was rejected.

The commission did approve Furtado's proposal to enlarge the hip roof in the rear, by two feet high and eight feet long. This expansion, which would be visible from the common, caused the most debate during the hearing.

The biggest objector to the plan was commission member Richard Horn, and his wife Carolyn, who live next door.

Carolyn Horn said she was disturbed by the size of the expansion, and also said the enlarged roof would diminish the amount of light coming into her house, and obstruct the view of Little Harbor from the second floor.

Commission Chairman Jacqueline Clark did not consider the proposal to be "in scale" with rest of the house, a feeling echoed by Buick.

"I think it's a bit long, a bit conspicuous," he said.

Clark, a district resident, and realtor, added that she has had business situations where a building permit was denied because it obscured someone's water view.

Furtado's architect and builder Jef Fitzgerald said the expansion would make the roof line parallel with the roof on the rest of the house's rear. Any attempt to lower or flatten the pitch would cause it to become unbalanced, he said.

Larson disagreed with Clark on the water view issue, saying, "unless it's written into the deed, you don't own that view."

She gave her own situation as an example. Larson said for years she had a view of Little Harbor from her home at 55 North Main Street, but lost the view when L. Emmett and Elizabeth Holt built a new house across the street.

"All of us could point to something that blocks our view of Little Harbor," Atkinson said. "The point of the commission is to decide if the expansion preserves the essence of the structure and I think it's done that."

The proposal squeeked by in a 4 - 3 vote; Clark, Gardner and Buick voted against it, with Horn abstaining.

Furtado's proposal to enlarge the house's three-season room, and turn it into a year-round room, also passed by a 4-3 vote.

The commission liked the decision to push it further back along the side of the house, but expressed some concern over the room's roof. Furtado intends to use it as a porch, but Gardner wasn't thrilled with the design of the required 42-inch railing on the top.

But Atkinson disagreed and thought it did look architecturally appropriate. She also said the house has the ability to "become a jewel" in the district

In the end, Gardner did vote for the room and deck, saying he "personally would have done it differently," but that "the essence of the house was preserved by moving it back" from the street.

The Cohasset Common Historic District, which is on the National Register of Historic Districts, includes the houses and buildings that surround the common, as well as the houses along North Main Street down to Sohier Street and St. Stephen's Episcopal Church.

The commission was created in 1978 as a town bylaw, and is made up of district residents, architects and realtors. Under the bylaw, "no building or structure within the district shall be altered or constructed in any way that affects exterior architectural features" without prior approval from the commission.

Cohasset.com?

Cohasset Town Hall could soon enter the online age, and allow residents to do their Town Hall business from home.

A new committee is mulling over the possibility of establishing an interactive town-run webpage, that could act as an electronic town hall, and allow residents to get forms, check meeting schedules, and post public notices without leaving their house.

"We're pretty excited about this idea, it could facilitate some of the services Town Hall provides to the people of the community," said King Street resident Lou Harvey, who is spearheading the committee. "There's nothing like not having to go to Town Hall on a rainy day."

Town Manager Mark Haddad said it would "open up Town hall 24 hours a day to residents." He said even though Town Hall stays open until 7 p.m. on Tuesdays, some residents just can't make the drive from work in Boston to Town Hall in time.

The committee is an offshoot of a March discussion between selectmen and the Town History Committee, which is currently writing the third volume of Cohasset history. The committee had asked for permission to set up a website where they could post the town history once completed, and keep it updated for future volumes.

"They decided it would probably make more sense to expand the scope and make a website for the town, since the town didn't have an official site," Harvey said.

Harvey, Haddad, Police Chief Brian Noonan, Cohasset Public Schools Technology Coordinator Ken Cisneros, Financial Director Michael Buckley, Town History Committee Chairman Wigmore Pierson, former Computer Advisory Committee member Guido Risi and South Main Street resident Ralph Dormitzer have all started brainstorming ideas for the new website.

"It's a really good committee," said Haddad.

"Basically, we've come up with some initial capabilities of the website we generally agree would make a good idea," said Harvey, a financial corporation website analyst. "It would be really useful to people in town if they could go there and get their building permit forms or check on information on town activities. We expect it to be a fairly active site."

He added everything right now is "preliminary" and that he would make sure a number of different community groups are involved before a final design is created.

Despite having a number of interactive options, Harvey said he expects to keep the downloading time of the page down. "It's intended to be functional without having to go out and buy the latest and greatest piece of technology to use it," he said.

Harvey said the cost of maintaining the page would cost approximately a couple of hundred dollars a month, and that the town would spend more money paying someone to update the pages then actually keeping it online.

"It would require half a person or so to keep up with it, it's not a particularly labor intensive thing," he said.

Haddad said once the committee has a grasp on what it wants to do, and how much it will cost, they will bring it before selectmen, and then, if needed, Town Meeting.

Pierson said the town history webpage could be used as a resource for Cohasset residents, and contain all three volumes of the town history. He also thought the annual town reports could go up and make the job easier for the people in 2050, who do the fourth volume of town history.

Once created, the question is what the web address would be. Despite the headline, "www.cohasset.com" is the name of a document-based management consultant company based out of Chicago. The domain names "www.townofcohasset.com" and "www.cohassetma.com" are owned and operated by Dream Communications, an Internet service company based in Cohasset.

Holly Hill Farm begins new season

Cohasset's oldest active farm is ready for the active summer season.

This past Memorial Day weekend on Saturday, May 26, Holly Hill Farm's farm stand in the main barn on Jerusalem Road opened. On Thursday, June 7, the farm will join other local growers and vendors to initiate the 2001 season of the Farmers' Market on the Cohasset Common.

All sixth-graders from the Deer Hill School with Betty Cisneros as lead teacher, will visit the farm in early June to learn with some hands-on activity about spring planting, take a walking tour of the historic barns, and explore nearby fields and woods. Later in July the farm will sponsor its second Summer Youth Farm Program for youngsters from the Cohasset Public Schools and the South Shore Charter School.

White notes that the farm, in addition to its youth and school programs, has already initiated a volunteer program for adults, and that the farm's first seasonal intern, a graduating senior from University of Massachusetts, who will join the staff this summer

A stitch in time

Shoe craftsman makes Cohasset stop

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Roger Dufault sat in The Shoe Market with a small crowd around him doing his work. The slightly built, older man had a metal device on his leg with a clamp holding something that vaguely resembled a slipper, but was in fact an unfinished shoe.

He would take a long needle with a thick thread in it, jam it through two pieces of leather, and pull it through.

Customers would walk in, watch for a few seconds, ask some questions about what he was doing, smile, and move on. And then they'd stop again on their way out, watch for a while again, ask a few more questions about his craft, say some nice words, and leave.

Dufault is a shoe-sewer.

In an era where machines are replacing human workers, most that stopped by were surprised that such a profession still exists.

"Most people find it enjoyable because they've never seen it done," Dufault said during a recent demonstration at the Cohasset store. "It's not like I'm showing them something they're seen before, 99 percent of people have never seen something like this. They have no idea the shoes are hand sewn."

Dufault works for Sebago shoes out of Sebago, Maine, and is essentially a traveling workshop. It's his job to go from city to city, store to store showing all the work that goes into making one of his company's shoes. He spent this particular Friday stitching together a green and blue "Nubuck" Sebago-brand leather loafer.

But Sebago is more well-known for its 51-year old "Dockside" line of shoes.

"It's the South Shore's signature shoe," store owner Greg Lagrotteria said about the white-soled, tan leather loafer.

Lagrotteria said those that stumble upon the unexpected demonstration are "fascinated" by the show making process. "More than anything I guess people are amazed at what goes into making a shoe, the detail and the craftsmanship."

Dufault said 85 percent of Sebago's shoes are hand stitched, and each shoe is usually handled by up to 200 people before being packed and shipped off, depending upon its quality.

In his prime, Dufault and Sebago's 140 other hand sewers could stitch up 24 shoes per day. Now, Dufault, 68, and a Maine resident that knows Lagrotteria from the latter's days as a national sales manager with Sebago, lets others do the hard work. He spends just 75 to 80 days a year on the road, but made the trip to Cohasset at the request of his friend.

"I like this little area," he said. "I'm usually only in big cities."

Lagrotteria said the demonstration was part of a spring promotion of the popular shoe.

"We sell a lot of Sebago's, we do a real great business with them," he said. "And as we roll into spring and summer, we did an active promotion to show how well they are made."

Dufault learned about sewing shoes from his father, who owned a shoe company in Maine. After a fire destroyed the business, and a stint in the Air Force, Dufault worked from 1955 to 1968 for the Bostonian shoe company, "before the imports started coming in." He has since worked intermittently for Sebago over the past 18 years doing the demonstrations.

Although it has allowed him to see the world, and spend countless hours showing someone something new, Dufault was very pragmatic about what he does.

"It's a job, like everything else."

Cohasset honors those who paid the price for freedom

Gutting it out

Krupczak overcomes injuries to defend title

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Al LaFontain stood with Brian Krupczak's parents near the finish line of the 200-meter race at Saturday's Class D track championships, the three of them holding their breath as Bellingham's Mike Bissen closed the gap on Brian.

Fortunately, the trio was able to exhale exultantly at the precise moment Krupczak broke the tape with a time of 23.02— 26 100ths of a second ahead of Bissen— to defend his Class D title in the event.

"There were a few anxious moments there," confessed LaFontain, the Cohasset High track coach. "We could see Brian struggling a little bit at the end, but he gutted it out like a true champ."

Hyperbole? Maybe a little, but who can blame the fourth year head coach? After all, it wasn't even certain up until race time on Saturday whether Krupczak would be able to run at all.

Krupczak, a senior tri-captain with the squad, pulled a couple of muscles in his right leg in the final team meet of the season a week ago Thursday. The injuries kept him on the sidelines for last weekend's South Shore Principal's meet, where he was the favorite to win the 200 for the second year in a row, and it appeared early last week that it would also force him to bow out of the Class D meet.

When Krupczak showed up on Saturday to test the leg, however, LaFontain said he could tell by the look on his captain's face that he was going to give it a go no matter what.

"Brian is just a phenomenal competitor," effused LaFontain. "He has worked so hard these last six years, you just know it would have killed him not to be able to go on Saturday. If there was any chance he could give it a try, you knew he would."

LaFontain figures that his star was at "around 85 percent", but that, plus an indomitable spirit, proved to be enough for the young man who's been running for the varsity squad since he was a seventh grader at Cohasset Junior-Senior High School..

So now it's on to the All-State championship this Saturday at Worcester State College, or is it?

"Before this (Class D) race, Brian said this would probably be it win or lose," said LaFontain. "But it sounded like he was changing his tune a little bit after he won. It wouldn't surprise me to see him up in Worcester Saturday."

Krupczak, whose personal best in the 200 is 22.4 seconds, will take it easy this week, hoping to recover a bit more from the leg injury.

"Hopefully, we can get him back closer to 90 percent," said LaFontain. "An injury like this takes a while to heal, and the only thing you can do for it is rest. But 90 percent of Brian Krupczak is still pretty good."

Class D notes

After putting together an unbeaten season to take the South Shore League crown for the first time in 25 years, LaFontain had understandable high hopes for the boys team going the Class D meet. He even went so far as to predict a possible top three overall finish in the 40 team field. The Skippers wound up

Skippers swamp CM

Advance to second round behind Libby and Previte-led offensive surge

Scoring six goals in the game's first eight minutes, the Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team combined solid defense with ball control, and rolled over their Catholic Conference opponent, Catholic Memorial, 15-3 in the first round of the Division 2 state lacrosse tournament on Tuesday night at Alumni Field.

The Skippers, who'd beaten CM a week earlier by a 15-9 margin, only to forfeit the game a day later, welcomed back co-captain Ronan Buick and juniors Sean Chase, David DeVito and Jason Moore, all of whom had missed recent games. Buick, who began the game on attack, was shifted back to midfield after a couple of minutes by Coach Kevin Orcutt.

"CM decided to shadow Ronan, and we felt we could break him loose from the midfield position a little easier," explained Coach Orcutt after the game. "We were able to do that, and it opened space up for everyone else too. And, once we got our offense in gear, the attack (Eric Libby, Curt Kahn, Paul Previte and Jason Moore) really controlled the pace of the game, especially in the second half."

Buick, who entered the contest with 43 goals and 32 assists, despite only playing 12 games, wound up with a pair of goals. But the offensive stars were junior attackmen Paul Previte, Eric Libby and Jason Moore, who combined for eight goals and seven assists. Previte (four goals, one assist) began the scoring a minute into the game, beating CM freshman goalie Garrett Curran. Libby (two goals, five assists), Buick and sophomore midfielder Robert Hickey (two goals) quickly followed, running the margin to 4-0 with the game not five minutes old.

"We've been preaching early intensity to the boys, and tonight they demonstrated that they're listening," said Orcutt. "On ground balls, defensive slides and overall hustle, this was perhaps our best effort of the season. Hickey was immense on defense and on face-offs, as was sophomore longstick Nick Spirito."

A thunderstorm that passed through at the eight-minute mark of the first period delayed the game for approximately a half hour with the Skippers up 6-0. When the teams retook the field, CM pressed the attack, and Eric Murray beat Skipper goalie Kyle Weber with less than a minute in the quarter on a rocket from about 12 yards out. Moore answered three minutes later, quick-sticking the ball home on a feed from Previte.

Cohasset went into halftime leading 8-2, then put the game away in the first minute of the third quarter on scores by Previte and Hickey. The defense took control from then on, allowing only three CM shots on net the rest of the way. Weber finished with seven saves, while his counterpart Curran – a former Cohasset youth lacrosse player – had more than 30.

"Our senior defensive unit of Geoff McWilliams, Justin Langham and Greg Figureido had a fine night," said Orcutt. "CM plays a very physical game, and it's tough to maintain concentration and discipline when you're taking the kind of hits our kids did. But credit to everyone; we focused on the scoreboard and what we're trying to accomplish in the tournament, and came out of the game healthy, intact, and ready for the next challenge."

Boys open tourney in Harwich

By James Olson
CORRESPONDENT

With two resounding 4-1 wins over the playoff hopefuls Scituate, the Cohasset boy's tennis team seems to be peaking at just the right time: right before their first playoff match in four years.

Drawing a seed within the top twenty out the 29 team field, Cohasset will play in Harwich this Thursday at 3 p.m.. Official seedings did not come out until late Wednesday.

Cohasset plans on using the same line-up it has to beat four of their last five opponents.

At first singles, senior captain All-Star Chris Golden will lead the way against the ace of the Rough Riders. Golden has had a knack for pulling out close matches this year, shown by both of his three set victories over sophomore Ryan Cahill of Scituate.

Senior Erik Shea has beaten anyone in his way at second singles, including laughers over Cahill's younger brother, Tim. Shea has been effectively combining height with speed to rush the net at appropriate times, and end points quickly.

Junior Joe Niessink has come on strongly recently at third singles, clobbering his opponent in all four of his last matches. Niessink is one of the hardest hitters on the team and, when he is on his game, is virtually untouchable.

At first doubles, Cohasset will bring its All-Star tandem of senior captain Jeff Scribner and sophomore David Ingber. The two are 9-1 together, including their recent two set wins over Abington, Scituate, and the previously undefeated Norwell first doubles team of Justin Meddaugh and Rory O'Connor.

Second doubles has been questionable lately, with freshmen Jesse Brewer and Rob Carpenter coming off consecutive losses to the neighboring Clippers.

Said Carpenter of his 6-7, 0-6 loss to the sophomore duo of Mike Wasserman and Keith Pollard last Friday, "I tried to open a can, but it was sealed. . .tight."

"It just wouldn't open today," affirmed Shea.

Since second doubles clearly has the ability to come out and win, the Skippers feel confident they could upset their Cape Cod hosts and possibly bring a tournament match back to Cohasset.

"We are incredibly excited," effused first year coach Pam Wilson. "We have very strong singles and doubles. We have figured out the right line-up to maximize our strength."

Although there has been some line-up shifting due to certain players moving up within the team ladder, everyone on the team has drastically improved their game since the beginning of the year.

"All of our players are so much better than they were when we started," reported Wilson.

Lacrosse team tourney bound

Girls lacrosse team earns first ever post-season berth

For the first time in its history, the Cohasset girls varsity lacrosse team has earned a state tournament berth. The girls won back to back games against Bourne this past week to accomplish their goal. Coach Cathy Gaudiano was pleased with her team's 9-5-1 season.

"We started this year with a very young team and had a winning record and the state tournament as our goals," said Coach G. "The girls came together quickly as a squad and we got substantial contributions from a number of key players, particularly Kristin Sheerin, Maura McKenney, defender Julie Lordan and goalie Gia Petrakis. I'm very proud of what the girls did this year. With nearly every player returning next year, this program has a very bright future."

Cohasset 9, Bourne 6

Cohasset fought the holiday traffic down to the Cape last Friday for a game that held the key to their state tournament hopes. The girls came out on fire but had their hands full with a stubborn and equally determined Bourne group. Sophomore first home Sera Genovese led the way with five goals. Junior second home Kristin Sheerin tallied four goals, including the 100th point of her lacrosse career at Cohasset High. Maura McKenney (two), Nicole Turgiss and Suzanne Lynner chipped in assists. Freshman defensive wing Ashley Faber had an outstanding game, stifling the Bourne attack. Gia Petrakis again was solid in goal, recording a season high 19 saves.

Cohasset 9, Bourne 4

Cohassset had an easier time of it on Tuesday afternoon at home against the same Bourne squad. The girls jumped out to a quick six goal lead behind sophomore center Maura McKenney, who had four goals before half-time and five for the contest. Kristin Sheerin, named before the game to the Pilgrim Conference All Star team, was once again immense, throwing in two goals and contributing two assists on McKenney tallies. Junior left attack wing Kate Grimm, with a beautiful shot to the upper corner, and sophomore Rachel Smith added second half goals to put the contest out of reach. Sophomore cover point Katherine Coyne made big defensive stops whenever Cohasset needed them and goalie Gia Petrakis had 13 saves.

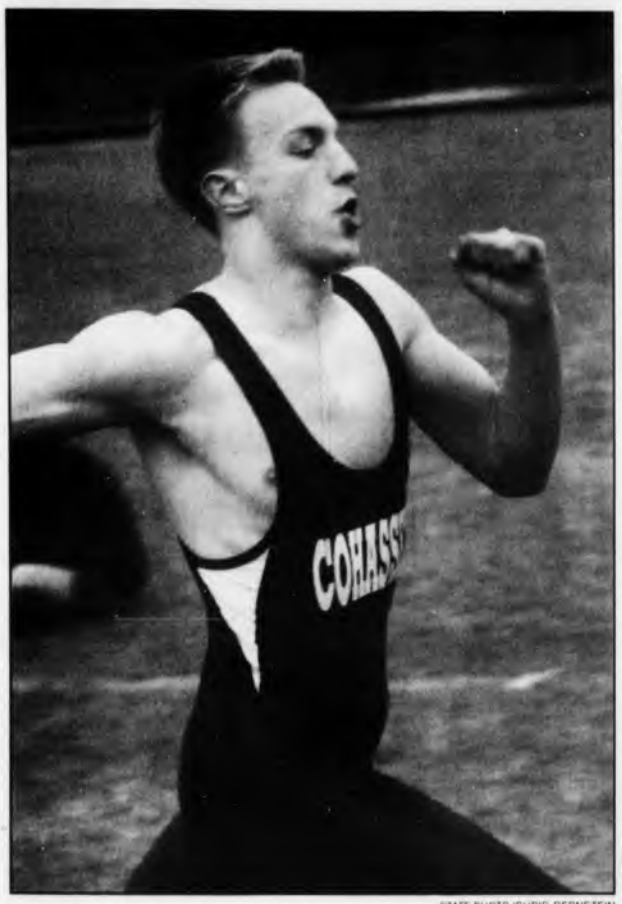
Cohasset finished its regular season with a home game against Duxbury on Wednesday. The girls will learn on Friday the location and opponent for their state tournament date.

Cohasset High golf team takes baby steps

Sweeney hopes for continued improvement

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After an 0-10 finish in 2000, the Cohasset varsity golf program was the surprise of the South Shore League this spring, finishing third in the league with a .500 record to qualify for the state tourney.



"We finished off by making the tournament, which was strong," reported first year coach Torin Sweeney. "We are taking baby steps as a program."

While the team deserves accolades for its turnaround year, their showing in the Eastern Mass Championship on Tuesday at the Easton Country Club showed that there is still plenty of room for improvement. Cohasset finished ninth in the pool of nine very strong teams, including South Shore powerhouses Norwell (which won) and Hanover (which took third).

"Being 5-5, I knew we were on the bubble, and it showed," admitted Sweeney, who has never been one to candy coat things.

The straightshooter added: "We tied for ninth with 11 points.

"I wouldn't say I'm disappointed because we had some real nice individual performances," said LaFontain. "I do think that there were a few people who felt the pressure a little more than we hoped, but that's somewhat understandable. That happens to a lot of athletes. This is a pretty big deal after all."

Krupczak's was one of four individual Cohasset athletes to qualify for the All-State meet with top six finishes on Saturday.

Junior Pete Maitland took third in the javelin with his toss of 170-2, and fellow junior Tim Baird captured sixth in the mile with a time of 4:38.24.

The boys 4 x 100 relay team took fourth with a time of 45.73.

On the girls side, freshman Gillian Weber opened some eyes by finishing sixth in the 800.

Ashland vs. Martha's Vineyard, which was to be played on Wednesday. The Skippers will wait to see whether the game will take place on Saturday or Sunday at Alumni.

"Weather could be a factor in the scheduling," said athletic director Ron Ford. "Alumni's wet and kind of beaten up, and with rain predicted for Friday, we'd like to give the turf a chance to recover."

Tuesday's contest rewrote the record book for Cohasset in EMass tournament play. The Skippers advanced past the first round for only the third time in the program's existence. In doing so, they set the following records: most goals scored in a tournament game (15), margin of victory (12), and number of goal scorers (8). Individual records set for Cohasset tournament play included total points in a game (seven, Libby), and assists in a game (five, Libby). Paul Previte's four goals tie a tournament record set by 1996 captain Ken Leahy, currently Providence College's all-time leading scorer.

Pierson recipient of Vassar's Richey Award

Cohasset's Beth Pierson was chosen for the Betty Richey Award, Vassar College's Office of Athletics announced at its annual end-of-the-year banquet. The award is named after Richey, a former coach, teacher and administrator at Vassar. Field hockey, lacrosse and squash coaches may nominate an underclasswoman from their respective sports.

Pierson was selected because she exemplifies the best of Richey, including loyalty, self-reliance, initiative, excellent sportswomanship and leadership qualities. The sophomore started all 20 games in field hockey, leading the team in goals scored with seven and was fourth in points with 14. In lacrosse, she started 12-of-15 matches and scored six goals.

"Since her first year at Vassar," Head Coach Judy Finerghty said, "Beth has worked hard in practice games. She completes drills, gives words of encouragement to her teammates and spends extra time perfecting her skills."

Pierson, an environmental studies major, was named to the Upstate Collegiate Athletic Association's All-Academic team for both sports.

Vassar's field hockey team finished the year with a 13-7 mark, setting a school record for wins. The Brewers took second in their inaugural UCAA season, captured third at the Seven Sisters Championship and qualified for the ECAC Northeast Championship.

Five laxers named All-Stars

Buick, Weber Get First-Team Honors

Five members of the Cohasset boys' varsity lacrosse team were named to the Pilgrim Conference all-star team Sunday night.

Senior co-captain Ronan Buick and junior goalie Kyle Weber were both first-team selections, announced Coach Kevin Orcutt. The Pilgrim coaches picked 14 players from the league's nine schools to the first team, and another 18 players to the second team.

Buick, winning all-league honors for the third time, leads Cohasset in scoring with 43 goals and 32 assists. Weber, who took over as a starter midway through his sophomore year, has posted 145 saves in 12 games while allowing 76 goals, an excellent .656 save percentage. Weber has also scored five goals this season in limited duty as an attackman.

Named to the all-conference second team were senior defenseman and co-captain Geoff McWilliams, a four-year varsity starter, junior attackman Paul Previte, the team's second-leading scorer with 28 goals and 15 assists, and sophomore midfielder Matt Davis, a strong two-way player who has 11 goals and seven assists.

"I'm pleased for our seniors," said Orcutt, "because this acknowledges their sacrifice, commitment and achievement over the four years. I'm also delighted at the recognition our underclassmen got, which bodes well for our future."

Cohasset will begin eastern Massachusetts tournament play right after Memorial Day weekend. The seedings and draw for the tournament are scheduled for Thursday, May 24.

are just not that good yet."

The thrust of that sentence, of course, is the "yet." This team only has one senior graduating this year in Ted Gledhill, an All-Star for the Skippers.

Junior All-Stars Will Prendergast and Jay Bertovich, who played the number one and number two spots for the team this year, both recorded 92's in the 18 hole competition in Easton. Unfortunately, it appears that both of these juniors will not be able to compete on the team in their senior year, as golf is becoming a fall sport in Cohasset, and Prendergast has committed to football and Bertovich to soccer.

"This year, it stinks," said Sweeney of the seasonal shift. "Next year, we would have come back with everyone except Teddy."

Also in the Easton tournament, sophomore Rob Lehr, who has been playing the number five position for Cohasset, shined with a 93.

"I was really pleased with that," said Sweeney.

Junior Dave Bouchard, who may very well take over the number one spot next year in Prendergast's absence, put in a respectable showing at 99 for the day.

Gledhill and Moody, also a question mark for next fall with a hockey commitment, both turned in rounds of 105.

Though Sweeney is never one to make excuses for himself or his team, Cohasset did come into this tournament handicapped. Due to the inclement weather of late, the team has been unable to practice at the Cohasset Country Club. In addition, when the Skippers took on Easton, it was the very first time they had even been to that particular course.

Anyway one looks at it, this has been a season of success for the Skippers. With at least three eighth graders who, according to Sweeney, can shoot in the 80's, waiting for next year to make their mark, and sophomores Gregory Griffin-O'Brien, Chris McKenna and Terry Hurley eager to make a statement, this fall could very well see a continuation of the upswing for the Cohasset High golf program.

and looks to be a fixture in the coming track seasons. She went undefeated in the 100 this season and captured the Patriot League title in the event.

Cohasset's Brian Krupczak was successful in defending his Class D title, despite limping through the trials with a hamstring pull. Krupczak ran 23.6 in the preliminaries and 23.7 in the semifinal heat before churning out a 23.02 and first place in the finals..

Scituate's Aquila Judge won her first class title ever with her 18-3/4 leap in the long jump and followed it up with No. 2 in out-dueling Hopkinton freshman Tiana Riel in the 110 hurdles. Judge and Riel were even over the first three hurdles before the Scituate junior bore down and pulled away from the Hilltopper phenom in 15.12.

Scituate finished third in the girls' team scoring with 40-1/2 points. Senior Jane Thies didn't have the eye-popping meet she had at the South Shore Principals the previous Saturday, but still set a personal best of 35-3-1/2 in placing second in the triple jump. Thies also cleared 5 feet in the high jump to come away with two top-six performances.

Norwell freshman Tom Kleber showed he'll be a runner to watch in the future as he more than held his own in taking fourth in the 800 with a time of 2:03.27. Tim Baird of Cohasset ran a strong sixth in the mile with a time of 4:38.24 and Abington's Joe LaBresh pushed hard to take fifth in the 400 in 52.6.

The Sacred Heart duo of Reed Sibley and Ian Roberts went 5-6 in the 110 hurdles in 16.17 and 16.25, respectively. Matt Boyd's leap of 5-10 was good enough for fifth place in the high jump. John Lannon clinched a top-six finish with his 127-3 hurl in the discus.

Sacred Heart's Polly Burokas, of Marshfield, ran a 62.1 for sixth-place over 400 meters and Cohasset freshman Gillian Weber ran a fine 2:30.98 to nail down sixth in the 800. Scituate High's Kiely Cuddihy qualified for the All-States with a fourth-place, 34-2 heave in the shot put.

The top six finishers in each event have qualified for the All-State Championships 's at Worcester State College this weekend.

The Scituate losses, though non-league, kept the Sailors from qualifying for the states, as it closed out their season at 6-9.

Some of the top teams in the draw, Bourne and Sharon for example, will be completely foreign to Cohasset. But others, like Norwell and Hanover of the current South Shore League, have had competitive matches with the Skippers this year.

While Cohasset may not know what to expect upon making the trek out to the arm of Massachusetts, a strong showing may very well land them in the next round.

Golf team takes baby steps

are just not that good yet."

The thrust of that sentence, of course, is the "yet." This team only has one senior graduating this year in Ted Gledhill, an All-Star for the Skippers.

Junior All-Stars Will Prendergast and Jay Bertovich, who played the number one and number two spots for the team this year, both recorded 92's in the 18 hole competition in Easton. Unfortunately, it appears that both of these juniors will not be able to compete on the team in their senior year, as golf is becoming a fall sport in Cohasset, and Prendergast has committed to football and Bertovich to soccer.

"This year, it stinks," said Sweeney of the seasonal shift. "Next year, we would have come back with everyone except Teddy."

Also in the Easton tournament, sophomore Rob Lehr, who has been playing the number five position for Cohasset, shined with a 93.

"I was really pleased with that," said Sweeney.

Junior Dave Bouchard, who may very well take over the number one spot next year in Prendergast's absence, put in a respectable showing at 99 for the day.

Gledhill and Moody, also a question mark for next fall with a hockey commitment, both turned in rounds of 105.

Though Sweeney is never one to make excuses for himself or his team, Cohasset did come into this tournament handicapped. Due to the inclement weather of late, the team has been unable to practice at the Cohasset Country Club. In addition, when the Skippers took on Easton, it was the very first time they had even been to that particular course.

Anyway one looks at it, this has been a season of success for the Skippers. With at least three eighth graders who, according to Sweeney, can shoot in the 80's, waiting for next year to make their mark, and sophomores Gregory Griffin-O'Brien, Chris McKenna and Terry Hurley eager to make a statement, this fall could very well see a continuation of the upswing for the Cohasset High golf program.

Strong local showings at class meet

EXTRA MILE

JOE REARDON

It was a day of redemption for Norwell's Kayla Halloran at Saturday's Class D track and field championships on the Clippers' home track.

Halloran, who had gone weeks struggling in her races, returned in grand fashion with a stirring 5 minute, 11.4 win in the mile. The junior ran a hard third-quarter to pull away from Scituate's Emily Tansey, who finished third in 5:19.7, just two seconds off her best and her fastest of the spring.

Rockland's Nicole Christoforo had a death grip on fourth place, guaranteeing herself a trip to this Saturday's All-State championships at Worcester State College in a mile race dominated by South Shore runners.

The brother and sister combo of Rockland's Bob and Melissa Murphy also qualified for the All-States. Bob, a three-sport standout, broke 20 feet for the first time in winning the long jump with a leap of 20 feet, 9-3/4 inches. Melissa, who is just a sophomore, nearly walked away with first-place honors in the 100-meter dash, but fell just short of Mashpee's Chimeka Andrews. She was timed in 12.68 to Andrews' 12.67. Melissa set a personal best in the qualifying heats and looks to be a fixture in the coming track seasons. She went undefeated in the 100 this season and captured the Patriot League title in the event.

Cohasset's Brian Krupczak was successful in defending his Class D title, despite limping through the trials with a hamstring pull. Krupczak ran 23.6 in the preliminaries and 23.7 in the semifinal heat before churning out a 23.02 and first place in the finals..

Scituate's Aquila Judge won her first class title ever with her 18-3/4 leap in the long jump and followed it up with No. 2 in out-dueling Hopkinton freshman Tiana Riel in the 110 hurdles. Judge and Riel were even over the first three hurdles before the Scituate junior bore down and pulled away from the Hilltopper phenom in 15.12.

Scituate finished third in the girls' team scoring with 40-1/2 points. Senior Jane Thies didn't have the eye-popping meet she had at the South Shore Principals the previous Saturday, but still set a personal best of 35-3-1/2 in placing second in the triple jump. Thies also cleared 5 feet in the high jump to come away with two top-six performances.

Norwell freshman Tom Kleber showed he'll be a runner to watch in the future as he more than held his own in taking fourth in the 800 with a time of 2:03.27. Tim Baird of Cohasset ran a strong sixth in the mile with a time of 4:38.24 and Abington's Joe LaBresh pushed hard to take fifth in the 400 in 52.6.

The Sacred Heart duo of Reed Sibley and Ian Roberts went 5-6 in the 110 hurdles in 16.17 and 16.25, respectively. Matt Boyd's leap of 5-10 was good enough for fifth place in the high jump. John Lannon clinched a top-six finish with his 127-3 hurl in the discus.

Sacred Heart's Polly Burokas, of Marshfield, ran a 62.1 for sixth-place over 400 meters and Cohasset freshman Gillian Weber ran a fine 2:30.98 to nail down sixth in the 800. Scituate High's Kiely Cuddihy qualified for the All-States with a fourth-place, 34-2 heave in the shot put.

The top six finishers in each event have qualified for the All-State Championships 's at Worcester State College this weekend.

Boys open tourney in Harwich

Harwich, entering this contest with a 10-2 record, will be using this match as a feeling out for their South Shore League opponents, as both Harwich and Mashpee will be joining the SSL next year for all sports.

The Scituate losses, though non-league, kept the Sailors from qualifying for the states, as it closed out their season at 6-9.

Some of the top teams in the draw, Bourne and Sharon for example, will be completely foreign to Cohasset. But others, like Norwell and Hanover of the current South Shore League, have had competitive matches with the Skippers this year.

While Cohasset may not know what to expect upon making the trek out to the arm of Massachusetts, a strong showing may very well land them in the next round.

Senior Erik Shea is unbeaten for the Cohasset High team since moving to second singles.

The summer Mass schedule will begin June 3, at St. Anthony Parish. The first Mass on Sunday morning will be 7 a.m. rather than 8 a.m. through the summer; the others at 9:30 and 11:30 a.m. Sunday and 5 p.m. Saturday will remain the same.

Weekday Masses are 7 a.m. and on Saturday, 8 a.m. The parish also sponsors a rosary dedicated to respect for life at 9 a.m. each Friday. And on this Friday, June 1, and the first Friday of each month, there is a 5 p.m. Mass followed by Benediction and Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament for adoration until 10 p.m.

St. Stephen's presents musical biblical story

On Saturday, June 2 at 7 p.m., St. Stephen's Players will present "Rescue in the Night." Written by Tom S. Long and Allen Pote, this musical about Daniel is a lighthearted but faithful rendition of the Biblical story of courage and obedience.

Under the musical direction of Fred Guzasky and Linda DeRosa-Coakley, the cast tells the story with songs, such as the "Wisdom Contest" and the "Plotting Song." The soulful "What Will Become of Daniel?" prepares the audience for the menacing lions in "Step into Our Den." Daniel's triumph is celebrated with "Here I Am, Lord" and the exuberance of the entire cast is heard in the rousing finale, "The One True King."

Sometimes laughter has a way of opening people to experience the presence of God. So please come and enjoy the experience for yourself. "Rescue in the Night" will be performed in Walton Rodgers Hall at the church. There is no admission charge; however, a free-will offering will be accepted.

St. Stephen's is located at 16 Highland Ave. and there is plenty of parking in the village lot. For more information, please call the church office at 781-383-1083.
